

Mt Kenya was split into two by two strangers, and Gachagua won

Mwangi Muiruri / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Deputy President Rigathi Gachagua insists that he is bound by the truth and aspires to remain so in his utterances.

But political pundits are now worried that while it is good for him to remain truthful, it is not clear who will tell him the truth about himself.

Mr Gachagua, 57, has inherited the seat of Mt Kenya kingpin in an abrupt and unexpected feat.

It is the first time the region is getting a political kingpin whose political experience is less than five years as a first-time MP.

Before Mr Gachagua, this position of influence was previously held by Dedan Kimathi (pre-freedom era), Mzee Jomo Kenyatta (1963-1978), Njenga Karume (1978-1992) Kenneth Matiba (1993-1997), Mwai Kibaki (1997-2013) and Uhuru Kenyatta (2013-2022).

On September 13 at the Kasarani International Sports Centre, Mr Gachagua took his oath as the second most powerful man in Kenya. Before God and man, from 12.53pm to 13.03pm, Mr Gachagua, swore allegiance to his country, raising the Bible high in his right hand with his left on the Constitution held for him by his wife.

While many were yet to come to terms with his phenomenal rise, he was more shocked, as he could not hide his bewilderment when he alighted from his vehicle at the stadium at 11.28am to a rousing welcome from tens of thousands of supporters, who needed a remote control to be muted from wild ululations.

Hypnotised, Mr Gachagua stood rooted, appearing not to know how to behave under such circumstances. But his political and administrative instincts came to his rescue, and he smiled in a manner never witnessed before.

He was to relish a similar moment at 11.53am, when he hugged Dr Ruto into the stadium amid wilder cheers from fans.

It was hard to imagine that this man now being escorted by a dozen security officers to take his oath was the same one arrested at 5am on July 22 last year over corruption allegations and spent the weekend on the hard and cold cement of police cells until Monday, when he was released on a pretrial bond.

He was to detail the arrest as "the most humiliating, where they plucked me from my bed, frog-marched me naked in front of my children so as to take me to Nairobi to humiliate me in the name of politics.

Mr Gachagua jumped the queue to beat accomplished political talents like Laikipia East MP Mwangi Kiunjuri, former National Assembly Speaker Justin Muturi and even Prof Kithure Kindiki.

It is hard to understand how our Mt Kenya people defied President Uhuru Kenyatta in the August 9 General Election", said Jubilee secretary-general Jeremiah Kioni, adding that "we made a mistake that might take time to rectify".

He said that "those of us with a conviction will never abandon the Azimio la Umoja One Kenya Coalition Party aspirations and we shall remain true to that cause".

Mr Kioni's stand is the elephant in Mr Gachaguan's house, said Mt Kenya political analyst Prof Ngugi Njoroge.

Read: Election shows who regional kingmakers are, with Roba the new kid on the block

"Mr Gachagua will have to work for Mt Kenya unity. If Azimio's running mate [Martha] Karua and Mr Kioni's statements of remaining outside the majority formation that voted for Dr William Ruto as President are anything to go by, then Gachagua has a journey to walk in uniting the region, he said.

It "is the first time that the Mountain has been split by two strangers and that in itself is a challenge", said career administrator Mr Joseph Kaguthi.

Mr Gachagua, he added, must remain cognisant that for the first time, the Mountain is not united by one of its own or by a political party based in the region.

"More importantly, it is well for Mr Gachagua to know that for the first time, the Mountain giving Mr Odinga more than 800,000 votes is a major [event] that cannot be wished away," he said.

While Mr Gachagua insists that he and some Mt Kenya rebels including Kandara MP Alice Wahome, Naivasha's Jayne Kihara, Kikuyu's Kimani Ichung'wa, Gatundu South ex-MP Moses Kuria and Kiharu's Ndindi Nyoro whipped the Mountain to vote for Dr Ruto, there are many residents who believe Dr Ruto won acceptance on his own and he would have still bagged the region even if he had campaigned alone.

"This is one election where our people behaved in a very new manner. They had followed Dr Ruto on their own and they were the ones who exerted pressure on their politicians to follow them to support him. This time round, they were not herded by their politicians ... it was the other way round," Prof Njoroge said.

But Mr Gachagua believes that Mt Kenya followed him to Dr Ruto, which raises the question that analysts are posing: Would he have succeeded in telling the region not to vote for Dr Ruto if he had attempted it?

Read: Mt Kenya bigwigs who paid the price for sticking with Uhuru

On August 25, Mr Gachagua attempted to answer that question when he attended the swearing-in of Nyeri Governor Mutahi Kahiga.

"You people of Mt Kenya and Nyeri do not know what you have done to me. I will forever remain indebted to you, he said.

I came here to beg you not to shame me as your son in the United Democratic Alliance (UDA) supporting Dr Ruto. I begged you to dress me up with respect so that I could stand boldly in our politics and declare I have the people behind me.

You did not betray me, because you voted for our candidates."

In a speech heavily laden with affectionate emotions, many fearing that Mr Gachagua would break down and wail, he said: "I thank you all from the bottom of my heart for not leaving me naked."

On Sunday night, Mr Gachagua said on KTN that "we in Mt Kenya gave the Dr Ruto presidency about 47 percent of total votes".

Mr Gachagua insisted that the sharing of power will be commensurate with that strength, prompting analysts to ask whether he appreciates that he is a national Deputy President who should be pursuing a national healing and unifying cause than being fixated on a 'power grab' by Mt Kenya.

Mr Kaguthi fears that "such pressures on a sworn-in President that President being the witty fox that is Dr Ruto will not attract negative engagements bound to breed a counter-attack".

He said that "boardroom haggling for power based on rewards should stick away from the public domain as opposed to the current situation when Mr Gachagua is taking every other opportunity to talk of percentages and sharing of power".

While Mt Kenya and the Rift Valley were important in the numbers game, he said, other regions that rejected Mr Odinga and instead became battlegrounds greatly helped Dr Ruto to win in the first round.

"This is an election where every single vote was important. All votes in Dr Ruto's win were important, including the very few he got in Luo Nyanza, Mr Kaguthi said.

He added that we should give Dr Ruto the latitude to form his government without appearing to hold him hostage, in a manner that can lead him to unite the 53 percent votes to block our capture mentality".

Murang'a Council of Elders chairman Rugami Chombou said "we are giving Mr Gachagua and his troops time to simmer and erupt".

He said it is too early to start running to Gachagua's camp when it has not even become clear how he intends to lead Mt Kenya".

He added that "Mt Kenya stands divided along the Kenyatta and Gachagua lines and the first task is to pursue that line that unites the region as well as remaining nationalistic on how to make the nation remain glued together".

The greatest test for Mr Gachagua is how to unite the region, said Nominated MP Sabina Chege.

"It won't be easy ... it might sound populist to say there are no divisions since Dr Ruto's United Democratic Alliance (UDA) swept nearly all seats in the region, Ms Chege told Inooro TV immediately after she was nominated to Parliament, one of only three Jubilee legislators in Mt Kenya.

But the truth of the matter is that the votes that Azimio received, the serious camps that were in Azimio campaigns ... leave us scattered. He must pursue our unity."

Besides Ms Chege, the other two Jubilee lawmakers are David Kiaraho (Olkalou) and Mr Kwenya Thuku (Kinangop).

Ms Chege said "respect, dialogue and concessions are the only hope for area unity".

Mr Gachagua is the eighth-born in a family of nine. His parents live in Hiriga village, Nyeri County, a walking distance from the Sagana State Lodge. They fought in the Mau Mau and his father built and serviced guns for freedom fighters. Mr Gachagua must have inherited their willpower.

Described by his close allies as a man of raw instincts when it comes to forging alliances, hard to please and who never forgives betrayal and handsomely rewards loyalty, Mr Gachagua is married to Mathira-based Pastor Dorcas Wanjiku and together they have two adult sons.

In 1985, Mr Gachagua joined the University of Nairobi (UoN), graduating with a degree in political science and literature in 1988. At UoN, he was a leader of the Nyeri District University Students Association (Ndusa), and chairman of the Association of Literature Students.

He attended Kabiruini Primary School from 1971 to 1977 before proceeding to Kianyaga High School for his O-levels and A-levels. He underwent paramilitary training at the Administration Police Institute in 1990.

After graduating from university, Mr Gachagua worked at the ministry of home affairs and national heritage before he joined the Administration Police Institute in 1990. After leaving the police college, he was posted to the Office of the President as a district officer cadet, serving between 1991 and 1992.

Mr Gachagua then went on to serve as a district officer in Kakamega, Ng'arua and Laikipia districts. Between 1999 and 2000, he was at the Kenya School of Government, graduating with a diploma in advanced public administration.

Between 2001 and 2006, he was a personal assistant to Mr Kenyatta. From 2007 to 2017, he remained behind the scenes, running his businesses before he contested the Mathira seat in 2017 and won.

Court extends freeze on billionaire Lands officials Sh1.2bn assets

Joseph Wangui / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

A court has extended by one month freeze orders on assets worth Sh1.2 billion belonging to an assistant director in the Ministry of Lands. Justice Esther Maina on Tuesday extended the orders issued in June by a further 30 days ahead of the hearing of the forfeiture suit filed by the Ethics and Anti-Corruption Commission (EACC) against Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel.

In the asset recovery suit, Mr Ochiel was sued alongside his wife Terry Violet Muthoni Maina, his brother Richard Omondi and their two trading companies - TERNIC Valuers Limited and TERNIC Enterprises Limited.

The judge set the hearing of the suit for October 24, 2022 and directed the parties to file their pleadings.

Houses, land, cars

The interim freeze order means the government official cannot access the assets that include houses, land and motor vehicles. The order also stops the couple from disposing of their vehicles valued at Sh10.5 million and a piece of land in Nairobi.

The EACC is seeking to recover 17 properties in Nairobi, Kisumu, Siaya and Kajiado counties. The properties registered in Mr Ochiel's name include a house in Karen worth Sh80 million, an undeveloped land in Parklands, Nairobi, worth Sh100 million, and a commercial building in Ugunja town, Siaya County, valued at Sh190 million.

Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel's Karen residence valued at Sh80 million.

Those belonging to his wife include an apartment block in Thome Estate, Nairobi, valued at Sh130 million, a five-bedroom house in Mirema Estate, Nairobi, worth Sh23 million, a five-acre land in Kisumu and half an acre in Nairobi.

Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel's Mirema Estate house valued at Sh23 million.

Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel's apartment block in Lolwe Estate, Kisumu, valued at Sh55 million.

In the suit, the EACC claims Mr Ochiel amassed the wealth through corrupt schemes and that he used his wife and his brother to receive, hold and conceal funds acquired as a result of corrupt conduct.

Mr Ochiel was first employed at the ministry in 1996 as a valuer, before rising through the ranks.

The anti-corruption watchdog said he acquired the questionable wealth between January 2003 and November 2018.

According to the EACC, during the said period, Mr Ochiel's cumulative legitimate income, including his salary and allowances from the ministry, could not have exceeded Sh6.3 million. The rest, the agency claimed, constitutes unexplained wealth.

The properties the EACC wants the couple to forfeit to the state include the Karen residence, TERNIC Court Apartments and Thome Estate and the undeveloped plot along Parklands Road in Nairobi.

The undeveloped plot of land along Parklands Road in Nairobi.

Also on the EACC radar is the commercial Building along the Kisumu-Busia Road, four plots in Kisumu Municipality and Lolwe Estate worth Sh108.5 million, as well as the house in Mirema, Nairobi.

Ugunja Commercial Building along Kisumu-Busia Road. It is owned by Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel and is valued at Sh190 million.

The EACC is also pursuing another property in Lolwe, Kisumu Red House valued at Sh15.5 million.

Mr Nicholas Owino Ochiel's apartment block (red) in Kisumu valued at Sh15.5 million.

The defendants accumulated assets in landed properties, bank and mobile money (Mpesa) deposits and motor vehicles which assets were disproportionate to their known legitimate sources of income amounting to Sh1,206,851,274, said the EACC.

Took undue advantage of his position

The EACC commenced investigations after receiving information that Mr Ochiel, through the two companies, entered into various contracts with property development companies, organisations and other members of the public to facilitate valuation and payment of government stamp duty.

They also got contracts for processing of title deeds and conducting forensic audit services.

The rendering of the said services was in direct conflict with Mr Owino's full-time occupation as an employee of the ministry. Investigations established that between January 2003 and November 2018, he exploited his official position of trust in the ministry during his employ for his private gain, said the EACC.

The agency argued that Mr Ochieng took undue advantage of his position to confer benefits to himself by entering into contracts with private entities for services he was employed and paid to provide at the ministry.

He is reasonably suspected of corrupt conduct by using privileged official information at the ministry for financial gain through the companies, thus compromising his public or official duties in favour of his personal interests, said the EACC.

Court papers indicate Mr Owino, through Ternic Valuers Limited, had various contracts with companies such as Mhasibu Housing Company Limited, Mhasibu Runda Welfare Association, Mhasibu Investments Company Limited and the Catholic Archdiocese of Nairobi.

They cumulatively paid him Sh59 million.

MPs seek to be paid more than Court of Appeal judges, want sitting allowance back

David Mwere / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

MPs will be paid more than a judge of the Court of Appeal if the parliamentary leadership manages to push the Salaries and Remuneration Commission (SRC) to reinstate the plenary sitting allowance.

The 416 MPs in the two Houses of Parliament National Assembly (349) and Senate (67) in the 11th and 12th Parliament had been pocketing Sh5,000 in plenary sitting allowance.

However, on July 28, SRC Chairperson Lyn Mengich published a gazette notice abolishing the allowance even as she introduced Sh150,000 in house allowance, setting their monthly pay at Sh710,000 and upgraded their job group. The notice came into force on August 9.

Other than the house allowance, the monthly remuneration for the lawmakers includes Sh426,000 in basic salary and Sh134,000 in salary market adjustment. The monthly pay does not include the allowances they pocket when attending House committee meetings.

Read: Changes that await the new MPs in Parliament

The scrapping of the plenary sitting allowance was so that the MPs monthly pay does not exceed that of Court of Appeal judges, who are superior in the pay grade. But this has not gone down well with the newly inaugurated MPs who are yet to start discharging their mandate.

Yesterday, National Assembly Speaker Moses Wetangula gave the clearest indication that the abolished sitting allowance will be restored. While addressing lawmakers during their induction at a city hotel, Mr Wetangula assured the MPs that they have no reason to worry as he has already initiated talks with SRC.

We live incrementally and not by reduction, Mr Wetangula told the MPs just hours after a meeting with SRC. The Speaker of the National Assembly chairs the Parliamentary Service Commission, which is in charge of the welfare of MPs and parliamentary staff.

We must have an equitable approach where MPs are clearly facilitated to do their work... Comparisons between Parliament and other departments of government have been made and distinctions drawn. I am sure that there will be no scandal, the Speaker said.

Last month, Ms Mengich said that the decision to abolish the Sh5,000 plenary sitting allowance for MPs and Sh3,000 for MCAs will save the taxpayer Sh8.2 billion over five years.

Read: SRC keeps President salary at Sh1.4m, DP Sh1.2m as MPs lose sitting allowances

We looked at the pay of the state officers from an equity and fairness perspective, which is equal pay for work of equal value. It is what we used to evaluate all the jobs and determine relative job worth for all the state officers in the executive and legislature at the national and county levels, the SRC chairperson said.

An MP at the national and county level discharges their role through plenary sittings. If you then are paid an allowance for plenary sitting and you are still getting a full time pay it amounts to double compensation, the SRC boss added.

But yesterday, Mr Wetangula said: Our engagement with the SRC is to remind them that as they go about their constitutional mandate, they should be alive to the fact that issues that are available to members like perks that they have been enjoying in the last parliaments should not be unnecessarily or unreasonably interfered with.

Earlier, the MPs had booed National Assembly Acting Clerk Serah Kioko after she mentioned the SRC chairperson as among those scheduled to make presentations to the MPs during the five-day induction.

The National Assembly has four sittings a week when in session Tuesday afternoon, whole day Wednesday and Thursday afternoon. The Senate sits on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons.

Before the plenary sitting allowance was abolished, an MP would pocket about Sh80,000 assuming that they attended all the plenary sittings in a month. On the other hand, senators would get Sh60,000 in plenary sitting allowance per month if they attended all the sessions in a month.

In the July 28 gazette notice, SRC also capped the committee sitting allowance. The committee chairperson is now entitled to Sh15,000 per sitting up to a maximum of Sh240,000 per month, vice-chairperson Sh12,000 per sitting up to a maximum of Sh192,000 per month and members Sh7,500 per sitting up to a maximum of Sh120,000 per month after tax.

MPs seek to be paid more than Court of Appeal judges, want sitting allowance back

David Mwere / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Should the MPs have their way in the push for the return of the plenary sitting allowance, they will earn more than Sh1.2 million per month inclusive of mileage claims in the case of a member who does not chair a House committee, which is more than the Court of Appeal judge. The mileage claim is only enjoyed by members of the National Assembly.

In December 2021, SRC reviewed the salaries of Court of Appeal judges to Sh1,156,108 up from Sh1,122,759.

Mr Wetangula further faulted SRC for limiting the engine capacity of cars the MPs are required to use.

Setting the engine capacity for MPs at no more than 3000cc is not right. You cannot constrain a member in the manner he serves his people who live hundreds of kilometres apart, he said.

Raila man carries the day in Kisumu after brief scare

Rushdie Oudia / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Mr Elisha Oraro who was being backed by the ODM leader Raila Odinga in the race for speaker of the Kisumu County Assembly narrowly carried the day after a spirited fight by his opponent Samuel Ongow.

He garnered 25 votes against Mr Ongow's 22 in a duel decided in a second round of voting. The first round saw Mr Oraro get 24 votes against 23 votes cast for his opponent.

The other contestants attracted no votes.

Mr Oraro was the speaker of the last assembly, a house that impeached his two predecessors.

When nominations closed at noon on September 19, seven people had submitted their papers for the Speaker race.

They included Mr Oraro, Mr Ongow who is also a former majority in the same House, lawyer Kenneth Oduor Amondi, James Kounah Ochieng, Victor Otieno Odongo, Linda Ogweni Atieno and Nelson Lennoa Jalango Adul.

Of these, only four met the threshold required for the position. They were Mr Oraro, Mr Ongow, Mr Amondi and Mr Kounah. The other three were not proposed and seconded by any of the elected MCAs.

On Monday, almost half of the elected MCAs boycotted a meeting attended by Mr Odinga, a gathering whose agenda was to rally the lawmakers into voting for Mr Oraro.

It was the highest level of defiance so far to the opposition leader that has annoyed the rank and file of the ODM party.

For the position of deputy Speaker, only two candidates Vincent Odhiambo Obuya and Nereah Akoth Okombo had been cleared, leaving out Joachim Oketch, who held the seat when the last assembly dissolved.

More than a week ago, Mr Oraro got a major boost when ODM nominated him as its candidate for the seat for a second time.

Mr Oraro had a foot in as he sought to keep the seat he inherited after the previous assembly impeached Onyango Oloo over corruption claims.

Kisumu County Assembly building. The MCAs last evening snubbed a meeting called by ODM leader Raila Odinga to lobby for his choice of speaker ahead of the elections.

In a September 8 letter, ODM secretary-general Edwin Sifuna notified assembly Clerk Owen Ojuok of the party's notice about picking Mr Oraro as its preferred candidate.

Before the vote was cast, the Nation had it on good authority that the number of MCAs supporting Mr Oraro and Mr Ong'ow, the two main contenders, was a tight 23-24, and that the race could go either way. In the end, Mr Oraro carried the day.

Only 24 elected MCAs attended a dinner meeting held at the Grand Royal Swiss Hotel, as the others allied to Mr Ong'ow skipped it, the result of serious lobbying that could embarrass Mr Odinga if MCAs from his Kisumu backyard reject his candidate and elect someone else.

The Kisumu assembly has 47 MCAs 35 elected and 12 nominated.

Bribery claims

A source at the meeting said: "I was surprised, even some four nominated MCAs who have not even taken the oath of office can skip a meeting called by their party leader because of money being given to them."

Mr Odinga, who was with Governor Anyang Nyong'o, his deputy Mathews Owili and Nyakach MP Aduma Owuor, is said to have sat waiting for the rest of the ward representatives to arrive before the meeting adjourned at 10pm.

Some of the members who attended the meeting told the Nation that Mr Odinga had asked them to support Mr Oraro.

"I believe that whether one did not support the party's choice, they could have just attended the meeting and listened to what the party leader had to tell them," said Milimani Market ward MCA Seth Adui Kanga.

There were claims that Mr Ong'ow was getting considerable support from Kisumu Senator Tom Ojienda.

His name is said to have featured prominently in the discussions during the Monday night meeting.

Though Mr Odinga did not show his disappointment openly, sources close to him revealed that he was not impressed.

He also took his time to revisit last months controversial presidential election, saying the Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission and the Supreme Court presided over what he called a sham electoral process that declared United Democratic Alliance (UDA) presidential candidate William Ruto winner.

It was a night of drama that involved serious lobbying, nominated MCAs hiding, money changing hands and phones being switched off by both camps to try to sway members to their side.

Both sides also engaged in serious heated social media campaigns that saw bloggers and influencers deployed by both sides to outwit each other and rally MCAs to their side.

Neither Mr Oraro nor Mr Ong'ow could be seen in the vicinity of the assembly, while Mr Amondi paced up and down and talked on his mobile phone, possibly attempting last-minute lobbying for more votes.

How Legio Maria church decided to build own hospital

Rushdie Oudia / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Three years ago, a group of young people from the Legion Maria of African Mission Church ventured into uncharted waters.

They decided to ask the church's leadership to build a hospital.

The idea was inspired by the hospitalisation of Pope Raphael Otieno Adika at M.P. Shah Hospital in Nairobi.

The project's strategic manager George William said: We decided to construct a mission hospital and that is why we went on and hired a consultant to do a feasibility study so that we could build a facility like no other.

And on Saturday last week, they kick-started the journey by laying the foundation stone for St Marys Legion Maria Mission Hospital in a colourful ceremony presided over by Pope Adika.

For a long time, people believed that Legion Maria adherents did not go to hospital or seek medical care and that instead they depended on prayers or spiritual water for healing, earning them the tag of a cult.

They have also been accused by authorities of preventing their children from going to school and not allowing them to get modern medical care and some vaccines.

To debunk the myth, the church is building a Sh200 million Level Four hospital in Marera, Kisumu West, where members of the church and non-members can get medical care.

The project has four phases and will take three years to complete, said Mr Paul Opondo, the contractor working with Cilneod Kenya Limited.

The hospital will be a three-storey 70-bed building, but in the first phase, they are putting up a community health centre, Mr Opondo said.

This will be a simple structure to roll out the project comprising a pharmacy, consultancy room, waiting area and examination rooms, he said.

The second phase will be setting up an outpatient hospital, female and male wards, a pharmacy and a restaurant. In the third phase, they will set up an accidents and emergency unit and maternity and paediatrics wards, and dental, optical and gynaecology units.

Last phase

In the last phase, they will set up a radiology unit, including X-ray, cardiology, MRI, CT Scan and laundry sections.

The issue of health is important for the church and the public, said Archbishop Peter Onyango Abuto, the Legion Maria administrative secretary.

This is an issue that made our founder father brush shoulders with the colonialists, who felt that we were against everything their administration was pushing, Archbishop Abuto said.

We had instances where people were concerned that patients could be removed from hospitals in order to attend church and be healed through prayer.

The church has been fighting off claims that its members do not go to hospital when they fall ill.

Church leaders insist that the founder, Simeo Melkio Ondeto, himself was treated in hospital when he was allegedly poisoned.

He is said to have been at the forefront teaching people suffering from HIV and syphilis that they had to go to hospital for treatment.

Pope Timothy Atila is also said to have gone to hospital often and even died in a health facility, as did Pope Chiaji Lawrence.

We know that we are prayerful, but there are diseases that no matter how prayerful we are, require physicians. What the Pope is doing today is making it clear that we support health institutions, and that is why we are building this hospital in line with vision 2030 and the Big Four agenda, Archbishop Abuto said.

He said they were impressed with M.P. Shah Hospital, which they said occupies a small space but offers excellent services.

The project started with a contribution of Sh8 million from congregants, but church leaders plan to work with the county government and like-minded non-governmental organisations to raise more money to complete it.

They are starting small but will complete the project and change the public's perception of the church, said Bishop Wycliffe Nyaperah of Lugari, the director of youth affairs.

This was the brainchild of the youth in this church. We are only fulfilling the prophecy of our founding father, who believed that it was the coming generations who would build this church, Bishop Nyaperah said.

The project is good for the community, said Pope Adika.

With time, the project will pick up, I am very certain. Many people will be brought here for treatment, he said.

He asked national government officials to ensure the project is protected.

He also hinted that the church may go further and build a home for orphans in future.

The area chiefs and the ward administrator asked the contractor to hire locals for unskilled jobs.

The church also asked the county government to include the hospital in the technical working group so that they can benefit from initiatives surrounding health.

Shock as prominent Embu businessman shot in night ambush

George Munene / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

A prominent businessman is fighting for his life in hospital after he was shot and wounded by gangsters in Thumari, Embu County.

Geoffrey Mwangi was travelling home from Embu town at around 9m on Monday after closing his business when five suspected gangsters aboard a pickup truck struck.

They blocked his car and sprayed it with bullets, leaving him with serious injuries in an attack that sent shock waves across the area.

The gangsters then escaped, leaving Mr Mwangi unconscious in his car.

A friend who was with him in the car escaped unhurt.

Mr Mwangi was rushed to Embu Referral Hospital with injuries in his neck and hands and bullets lodged in his body.

He was later transferred to Nairobi for specialised treatment after his condition worsened.

Embu West sub-county police boss Julius Kyumbule said they were pursuing the gangsters.

He said the motive of the attack could not be immediately established.

Commenced investigations

"The gangsters left without stealing anything from the trader and we have commenced investigations to establish why the victim was shot," he said.

Traders condemned the attack and called on the police to investigate the shooting.

"We want to know those who attacked our colleagues and the reasons behind it," Mr Kanyi Maina said.

They lamented that security has deteriorated in the area and accused police of sleeping on the job.

The traders demanded the arrest and prosecution of the wrongdoers, saying the attack was of grave concern.

"Crime is on the rise in the area and the police are not doing anything about it," Mr Maina added.

John Mate, the chairman of the Embu branch of the Kenya National Chamber of Commerce and Industry, called on the police to beef up security.

"Everyone is living in fear following the invasion of the region by criminals. Shops have been raided and property looted. The situation is serious and security officers should wake up and do their job," he said.

The traders warned that investors may flee the area because of insecurity.

3.5 million Kenyans face starvation due to drought

Barnabas Bii / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

About one million children below five years old and more than 100,000 pregnant and lactating women require urgent treatment for malnutrition, as more than 3.5 million Kenyans face starvation due to crop failure caused by prolonged drought.

Statistics from the National Drought Management Authority (NDMA) and the Kenya Red Cross Society show that the number of children facing acute malnutrition increased from 884,464 in August to 942,000 this month.

The number of pregnant and lactating women who need treatment for severe famine stands at 134,000, up from 115,727 last month.

Alarm stage

The drought in more than 10 counties, mainly in Northern Kenya, is in the alarm stage, with thousands of families facing starvation and in urgent need of relief supplies and health care.

The latest report from the Kenya Red Cross shows that an estimated 80,000 families in West Pokot face starvation, with a majority of those affected migrating to neighbouring Uganda in search of food and pasture for their animals.

Another 100,000 households in Turkana County face severe starvation, with Turkana East, Turkana North, Kibish and Loima sub-counties the most affected.

Severe malnutrition

Kenya Red Cross North Rift manager Esther Chege yesterday said they were providing vitamin A supplements, de-worming children and promoting appropriate infant and child feeding practices.

Some 8,000 children and 5,365 mothers in Turkana face severe malnutrition.

We are partnering with USAID, the Ministry of Health and the county government in [providing] health care, including those faced with malnutrition children and the aged, Ms Chege said.

They are also helping to rehabilitate water points to prevent outbreaks of waterborne diseases.

We are working to save lives and build resilience in the most vulnerable communities, she said.

She disclosed that the agency has distributed foodstuffs to 150 households in Pokot Central and issued drought-resistant sorghum, finger millet and green gram seeds to 610 families.

We have carried out de-stocking [for] 5,240 households to cushion them from further losses, said Ms Chege, adding that food shortages were worsening.

Some 103,000 households in Turkana face severe starvation, she said.

Crossed to Uganda

More than 30,000 residents have crossed to Katido and Kaboong districts in Uganda in search of food, pasture and water for their animals.

Some 5,323 households have benefited from the Sh5,000 cash voucher, while 1,300 households have received relief supplies maize flour, rice, sugar, salt and cooking oil, Ms Chege said.

She said the Red Cross, the county government and the NDMA were carrying out de-stocking in households facing starvation.

More than 60,000 households have benefited from the de-stocking programme while another 5,000 households are to receive cash vouchers, she said.

The agency has distributed food to 1,000 hunger-stricken families in Elgeyo Marakwet County and 3,000 more are targeted to benefit from the cash voucher programme.

Inadequate pasture

An NDMA report shows that families in 23 arid and semi-arid (ASAL) counties face food shortages and inadequate pasture and water for their animals.

Food shortages were caused by crop failure caused by drought that damaged crops planted in April and May.

A report from the Ministry of Health, Kenya Food Security Steering Group (KFSSG) and Early Warning Systems Network in May showed that families in Samburu, Marsabit, Isiolo, Garissa, Mandera and Wajir were in urgent need of humanitarian assistance due to undernourishment.

Leaders appeal

Leaders from the affected counties urged the government to provide humanitarian aid so as to avert disasters witnessed in previous dry spell periods.

The families have experienced difficulties in getting relief food and normal supply needs to be restored to avert further calamities, said Ekiro Lobuel, from Kibish sub-county.

An estimated 3.5 million Kenyans face starvation because of the prolonged drought and erratic rains, with the most affected in ASAL counties in Northern Kenya.

Several counties in that region hit hard by drought will benefit from funds to be coordinated by the NDMA to reduce the impact of malnutrition among children and families.

The government has disbursed Sh1.1 billion to cushion poor and vulnerable families in Turkana, Wajir, Mandera and Garissa counties.

The money is to be channelled through the Hunger Safety Net Programme (HSNP) implemented by the NDMA.

Details have emerged on how an unknown gunman shot and killed the son of a couple who were quarrelling outside their home in Buruburu.

Police have launched a manhunt for the gunman, whose identity is not known.

The gunman shot Ms Cecilia Mugure, 42, at 3.45am after she arrived home alongside her husband, Mr Njoroge Wahome, 47.

The couple were reportedly arguing outside their home when the shooting happened.

In a report filed at the Kamukunji Police Station, the couple arrived at their home from a local joint in Bee Centre in Umoja and started arguing because the woman refused to follow the man into the house.

Ms Mugure was wounded and the couples son, Mr James Muriithi, 19, succumbed to gunshot injuries.

It is then that Mr Wahome reached out for his phone and called his cousin, Mr Karuri Karue, asking him to rush to his house and help rush the two to hospital.

Rushed them to Mama Lucy Kibaki Hospital

Mr Karue, who reported the matter, rushed them to Mama Lucy Kibaki Hospital, where the son was pronounced dead on arrival. He had a gunshot wound on the head, the police report said.

Ms Mugure, who had a gunshot in her chin, was transferred to Kenyatta National Hospital (KNH) in a critical condition.

Police officers and detectives from the Directorate of Criminal Investigations (DCI) rushed to the scene. They questioned the couples a 13-year-old daughter, who said they heard a commotion between the father and the mother that lasted over two hours.

The girl told the police that the father went upstairs where they live on the second floor leaving the wife outside. He started taking whisky and when the daughter questioned the father where the mother was, he never responded, the report said.

The girl then woke up her brother, asking him to go check on their mother.

They found their mother lying down under a Maasai leso, but she refused to get up.

The two then decided to tell their elder sister what was happening. The young man asked his sister to get his phone from the house.

She rushed to the house and when she was going back after picking up the phone, she heard two gunshots and she clearly saw a man holding a gun. It is then that she rushed back and informed the father of what she had witnessed, the report said.

The young man and his mother were rushed to hospital. The man succumbed to his injuries, while the woman was transferred to KNH. The mans body was taken to the Mama Lucy Hospital morgue in Kayole.

River Yala: Dumped bodies back as six men, woman retrieved from water

Kassim Adinasi / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Yala Sub-County Hospital administrators have called on families with missing relatives to visit its morgue to find out whether they are among seven unidentified bodies lying there.

The bodies of six males and one female were retrieved from the River Yala in the past two months.

Medical superintendent Bruno Okal said the bodies were collected from different spots in the river.

We call upon members of the public to visit and establish whether their missing kin are among the bodies. Three of the bodies were retrieved from water while four were found along the banks, according to the police who brought them, Dr Okal said.

He added: The hospital administration is making this call in order to ease the strain that is currently experienced in the facility. We can only handle a maximum of 16 bodies. Secondly, relatives of the deceased persons should give them a decent send-off.

Some of the seven bodies had begun decomposing, just like 32 others retrieved from the same river in January.

Our mortuary is relatively small. Bodies retrieved from water are often in bad shape and require specialised handling our facility is strained beyond limit, he added.

Of those retrieved in January, 13 were positively identified by relatives through DNA analysis and were subsequently collected and buried.

At the time, the news of unclaimed bodies retrieved from the River Yala and piled up at the Yala hospital mortuary shocked the country, with media reports suggesting that they were extrajudicial killings possibly carried out by state security agencies.

In an earlier interview, Mr Nicholas Okero, who helped the police retrieve bodies from the river, said some bodies were stuffed in sacks before being discarded into the river.

Some had deep cuts and their faces [were] totally disfigured. Some bodies had also stayed in water for long and [had] begun decomposing, Mr Okero said.

He also said some had their faces tied with polythene bags and their hands tied to their backs.

He speculated that some of those bodies might have been dumped upstream and driven downstream by currents to the Ndanu falls, where they were found.

Government chief pathologist Johansen Oduor, who led the postmortem examinations on the 32 bodies, said at the time that some of them were skeletal.

He said others had disfigured faces and could not be identified unless through DNA sampling.

Police spokesman Bruno Shioso said the police would investigate what led to their deaths.

As the police, we shall leave no stone unturned. All the bodies will be identified and we shall ensure justice is served. We shall arrest all the perpetrators and bring them to face the law, he said.

Nairobi crime map: City residents at the mercy of miscreants

Nyaboga Kiage / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

In the British series Midsomer Murders, directed by Anthony Horowitz and Douglas Watkinson, it is all about several mystery murders that take place in a crime-infested town in the county of Midsomer.

Every episode has a high number of body counts and when they are discovered, police go out promising to find out who is behind the deaths, in vain.

But it is clear that the culprit is not a serial killer and the person doing it succeeds in compounding their crimes as they go on with the killing ways.

It is reminiscent of the way many young people have been killed across Nairobi and their bodies dumped in rivers or forests.

And just like in the TV series, the police have not managed to get to the bottom of the cases that leave families in pain and the public shocked, wondering who might be the next target.

Interestingly, most of the victims whose bodies are found dumped in various parts of the country usually have criminal records.

When Mr Samuel Mugo Mugota was shot dead on Mirema Drive in Roysambu, Nairobi County, police said they were investigating the killing, which was captured on a video that made the rounds on social media. He was shot six times by unknown assailants but his killers have not been arrested.

Samuel Mugo Mugota who was shot six times by unknown assailant in Mirema, Kasarani.

A few weeks later, the Directorate of Criminal Investigations (DCI) boss revealed that Mr Mugota, whom they linked to a series of robberies in the city, was a wanted man and had several cases in court.

According to the police, Mr Mugota was a suspected criminal who led a secret life and he was probably killed by his fellow gangsters over a business deal gone sour.

To back their execution theory, detectives said that nothing was stolen from his car. A laptop, five mobile phones and nine identity cards were found in his Honda CRV.

Just like in Mr Mugota's case, three weeks ago, four men disappeared from Kasarani in Nairobi, only for their bodies to be found dumped in different parts of the country.

The bodies of Fred Obare, Frank Obegi, Moses Nyachae and Elijah Omeka were found in Kijabe forest and Magadi amid claims that they were involved in a cash and cryptocurrency scam.

Will one day get justice

Police said they were investigating the matter but they have not said what they uncovered, with the men's families hoping that they will one day get justice.

Police records and data from other agencies show that Nairobi had the highest number of reported crimes, including murder, in the past three years.

Research by the Nation on the number of crimes reported across the country compared with Nairobi shows that a person is more likely to become a victim of crime in the city.

Other counties that have recorded a large number of crimes are Kiambu and Meru, and the cases increased especially during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Data from the 2021 Kenya Economic Survey showed that the three counties accounted for over a quarter of the 81,272 crimes reported in the last year.

Nairobi topped the list, recording a total of 6,686 crimes, followed by Kiambu (5,715) and Meru (5,032 cases).

Nairobi City police command station accounted for the highest number of persons reported to have committed crime at 8.5 percent, Kiambu and Meru at 6.7 percent and 6.1 percent, the Kenya National Bureau of Statistics (KNBS) said in the report.

A report from the National Police Service reveals that in the last five years, Nairobi residents reported criminal cases to police stations as follows: in 2017, a total of 7,434 cases; in 2018, 2019, 2020 and 2021, the cases were 7,128, 8,246, 5,844, 6,686, respectively.

Nyaboga Kiage / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

It has also emerged that the majority of the cases are reported by men.

The total number of people reported to have committed homicide went up by 9.3 percent from 2,494 cases in 2020 to 2,726 cases in 2021, the report said.

A person is more likely to be robbed, mugged, raped or killed in Nairobi than in any other part of the country.

Research conducted in 2021 by the National Crime Research Centre, a government body that keeps data and records on crime rates, showed that mugging topped the list of crimes in the country.

Muggings accounted for 68.8 percent of crimes in Nairobi compared with the national percentage of 19.1. Second on the list for the city was theft (54.9 percent), while the national average was 40.4 percent.

A person is more likely to be robbed, mugged, raped or killed in Nairobi than in any other part of the country.

Robbery with violence

Third on the list is burglary and break-ins, which recorded 51.1 percent in Nairobi, compared with 42 percent nationally.

Robbery with violence and possession of narcotic drugs came in fourth and fifth, recorded 30.2 and 30.1 in the city.

Robbery without violence was sixth (30.2 percent), compared with 10.6 percent nationally.

The seventh, eighth and ninth positions were taken by murder (13 percent), assault causing bodily harm (9.8 percent) and rape (9.7 percent).

Other crimes reported in the city included drunkenness (5 percent) and disorderly conduct (4.9 percent), and gender-based violence (4.5 percent).

The high crime rate in the city and fears that one may be attacked or robbed were cited in a survey conducted by Numbeo, which ranks countries by various strata.

Most Nairobi residents fear walking alone at night.

Also read: British national loses Sh4 million in Nairobi

Other crimes listed by the organisation include assault, armed robbery, vandalism and theft.

The others are muggings and car break-ins.

Various forms of crime

Security experts say various forms of crime increased, especially after the Covid-19 period.

The rate of crime is high in Nairobi because many people usually flock there to find jobs and earn an income, said Mr Kevin Moenga, a security analyst based in the city.

He said that the high number of people in the city was a contributing factor to the increase in crime.

Most people also lost jobs during the Covid-19 pandemic and this saw many engage in deals or crimes that can see them survive until they get other jobs, he said.

Crimes like mugging, he said, are on the increase because perpetrators do not need to use force or weapons.

He also said that when courts release offenders on bond, they go back to society and continue committing crimes as their cases drag on.

A study conducted by Dr John Ndikaru of the Technical University of Kenya (TUK) shows that controlling crime is a big problem.

Kenya has shown a marked increase in the contemporary years in the occurrences of lawbreaking and violations. The rate is alarming and has attained an epidemic proportion, he said.

He said most of the crimes happen in major towns, especially Nairobi.

When crimes are not reported to the police, victims may not be able to get necessary services to cope. Offenders may go scot-free, and law [enforcement] and community resources may be misdirected due to a lack of precise information about local crime complications, he said.

Dr Ndikaru said that the common motivations for reporting a crime include punishing the offender and discouraging potential offenders.

Isiolo court jails man to 30 years over terrorism related charges

Waweru Wairimu / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

A man will serve 30 years for being in possession of terror related materials.

Isiolo Chief Magistrate Lucy Mutai found Mr Osman Galle guilty saying the prosecution provided sufficient evidence to show the materials contained elements of radicalisation and extremism.

The court established that the materials were encouraging followers and sympathisers of terror groups to harden themselves in the fight against Kenya.

The magistrate said it was common knowledge that Kenya was an enemy to terror groups and therefore any message intended to encourage a terror group to fight Kenya, could only be intended for purposes of terrorism.

The accused, the court said, did not sufficiently corroborate the prosecution's evidence in regard to the charge.

"I find that the prosecution has provided convincing evidence to prove all the counts leveled against the accused," Ms Mutai said.

Mr Galle will serve 30 years for being a member of a terrorist group and 11 other charges related to possession of terrorism articles. The court ordered that jail terms run concurrently.

The court heard that Mr Galle had gone to visit a friend-one Osman Chule who had been detained over terror related charges on March 28, 2017 when Anti-Terror Police Unit (ATPU) officers pounced on him. Mr Galle was in the company of one Mohamed Adan Hirbo.

On interrogation and search, the pair was found with two mobile phones, one which had videos suspected to be extremist and which belonged to the accused.

Mr Galle was immediately arrested and Mr Adan released after his phone was found with no incriminating information.

The phone that had suspicious materials in video form was three days later forwarded to ATPU forensic laboratory where it was established that it had incriminating content.

Terrorist act

The accused would on April 4 same year be charged with 12 counts that included possession of articles connected with commission of terrorist act, being a member of a terrorist group and collection of extremist articles contrary to section 29 of Prevention of Terrorism Act 2012.

The court was told that the accused phone had a total of 24 videos and 72 audios among them Hakuna Hifadhi ila kwa Imani, Wanafiq by Aboud Rogo, Mujahideen moment 10, Jihad na Izza, Kikao Cha kupinga Jihad and Masimba-Nasheed all instigating commission of a terrorism act.

Majority of the materials were preachings in Swahili while others such as Hakuna Hifadhi ila kwa Imani was done in a combination of English and Arabic and authored by Harmet Imar, a member of Al-Shabaab.

In his defense, the accused denied all the counts including being a member of Al-Shabaab or any terror organisation and told the court he was set to join Mount Kenya University's Embu campus for a three-year-course.

Arguing out their case, the prosecution team said the videos that were in the accused' phone could have been used in training, radicalisation and to encourage and incite ordinary Kenyans to join al-Shabaab.

A report from an IT forensic analyst who relied on raw data retrieved from the mobile through logical system of extraction showed that the accused not only had a collection of terrorism materials but generated and downloaded them in his phone.

The prosecution further said had Mr Galle been not interested in the videos, he would have deleted them but chose to save them in his phone.

The videos were stored in the phone memory but did not show the site where they were downloaded from, investigators told the court.

Governor Bii embarks on addressing ECDE teachers plight

Fred Kibor / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Uasin Gishu Governor Jonathan Bii will this Friday employ 1,800 Early Childhood Development Education (ECDE) teachers, in keeping with his pre-election manifesto, he told Nation.Africa on Tuesday.

Under his nguzo ni kumi agenda, he is revamping the ECDE department, which is among his top priorities, and cites the urgent need to improve the tutors welfare.

I want a robust ECDE department and that is why I will employ them under permanent and pensionable terms. They have been serving under contracts for a decade and I am focused on addressing their plight and ensuring the young children are nurtured properly, he said.

He spoke on Tuesday morning at his office in Eldoret when the Nation Media Group team, led by North Rift Regional Editor Ms Caroline Wafula, paid him a courtesy call.

Governor Bii said he will focus on reviving several collapsed programmes, including ECDE, in his first 100 days in office.

ECDE teachers in May this year asked the Senate to compel the county government to address a raft of issues affecting them, including employment on permanent and pensionable terms, implementation of a scheme of service that captures remuneration, and addressing the un-procedural stoppage of stipends and delays in payment of wages.

The teachers said these issues and lack of commitment by the county government to address them had demoralised them, resulting in poor performance and mass resignations.

They said they were paid a maximum of Sh10,000 per month, although some were hired more than nine years ago.

Because of the poor welfare faced by the ECDE teachers, a majority of them have resigned and sought work elsewhere despite having trained for the profession. Lack of commitment by the county government to address the issues has aggravated the matter, said the tutors in their May petition.

Governor Bii said putting them under permanent terms will improve their welfare and commitment to their work.

The governor said another programme that he has already revamped is the dysfunctional revolving fund, which is now operational.

I have revived the collapsed health revolving fund. In partnership with Moi Teaching and Referral Hospitals AMPATH, patients will now access affordable drugs. Patients have been suffering and I am happy their burden has been lessened, he said.

Within my first 100 days in office, I am optimistic I will achieve a lot, including completing some of the unfinished projects in the county like the sports stadiums.

Through my nguzo ni kumi agenda, we will refine the socioeconomic agenda in the county.

He will unveil his cabinet on Thursday, after vetting by the county assembly.

The governor also said he is keen to address ethnic hatred that has often surfaced in the county, particularly around election time. Locals are reluctant to invest in decent houses, fearing they will be burnt down in violence.

We have had a history that in each election cycle there are ethnically motivated skirmishes, he said.

I was shocked to learn that there are people who have been living in this county for more than 50 years but are afraid to build decent housing because of ethnic fears around elections.

This is something that needs attention so that residents can live freely without any fears, regardless of the seasons.

Ms Wafula congratulated the governor on behalf of NMG on his win, noting that the company is open to partnerships with county governments that enhance community development and serve the best interests of Kenyans.

As media, we play the important watchdog role in society, and we are keen on partnering to ensure that devolution works for the benefit of Kenyans, she said.

Why farmers want State to use cooperatives for cheap fertiliser

Stanley Kimuge / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Farmers want the government to use cooperative societies to distribute subsidised fertiliser promised to farmers so as to lock out brokers.

At his inauguration last week, President William Ruto announced plans to distribute 1.4 million bags of fertiliser at a reduced price of Sh3,500 per 50kg bag, down from Sh6,500, as part of interventions to increase food production and bring down the cost of living.

Kenya Farmers Association (KFA) director Kipkorir Menjo said cooperatives will ensure many small-holder farmers get cheap fertiliser.

If the process is well managed, the fertiliser will reach most of the small-scale farmers. However, this should not be restricted to cooperatives only. [Community-based organisations] and other groups can also be used as long as they are legally registered and allowed to distribute the fertiliser, Me Menjo explained.

No fertiliser

In the North and South Rift regions, farmers told Nation.Africa that they had not received the cheap fertiliser.

We have received fertiliser through Kenya Tea Development Agency (KTDA) which has been deducted through the organisation. However, we expect the cheap fertiliser in the coming weeks as directed by President Ruto, said Peter Sigei, a tea farmer in Bomet County.

For the past two weeks, some tea farmers have received fertiliser for Sh5,600 per 50kg bag from KTDA under an earlier deal with the agency.

Dairy farmers are grappling with the high cost of animal feed in the market due to rising costs of raw materials even as they hope to get fertiliser to grow fodder.

We want to urge the government to use cooperatives so that the fertiliser can get to all wards. We want to take advantage of the good rains expected from next month to grow pasture for our livestock, said David Chobet, who practises mixed farming.

Proper database

He said affordable fertiliser will enable farmers to plant high-value crops and fodder for their livestock.

Mr Menjo said a proper database of farmers needs to be set up to ensure that only genuine ones benefit from the government fertiliser subsidy programme.

We have been told that the database is still in the pilot stage. But there is a need to do proper registration of farmers to ensure that the process is not abused, said the official.

Kenya's maize production has fluctuated in the past eight years, with the highest yields reported in 2018 (44.6 million bags) and the lowest in 2017 (35.4 million).

Farmers produced 40.7 million bags in 2013, 39 million in 2014, 42.5 million in 2015, 37.8 million in 2016, and 39.8 million in 2019, according to the Kenya National Bureau of Statistics.

Several factors including erratic rainfall, high costs of farm inputs, disease outbreaks such as armyworms, head smut and maize lethal necrosis have contributed to the decline in maize yields.

Global shortage

Last season, most farmers failed to get affordable fertiliser, with government officials citing a global shortage of the commodity.

Trans Nzoia Agriculture executive Dr Mary Nzomo said maize production in the region this year is forecast to stand at 5.27 million 90kg bags against a target of 5.6 million.

She attributed the decline to non-optimal use of fertiliser during planting due to high production costs.

Most farmers did not achieve the optimal application rates and this will definitely lead to low productivity, she told Nation.Africa.

Woman charged with Sh8.1m fraud released on bond

Joseph Openda / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

A woman accused of conning a Kenyan from Australia was charged with fraud in a Nakuru court.

Ms Mary Wanjku Njenga, who appeared before Principal Magistrate Ruth Kepha, was charged that she fraudulently obtained Sh8.1 million from Keziah Ngina Mbugua between February 1 and August 30.

The suspect allegedly duped the complainant into believing that she was in a position to sell her a parcel of land in Kenya, police reports show.

Ms Njenga allegedly posed as a property agent and received the money from the complainant through cronies using different bank accounts.

She denied the charges and pleaded with the court for release on reasonable bond terms.

Her lawyer told the court that she was not the real suspect but rather her child, who also resides in Australia.

I request the court to consider admitting my client to reasonable bond terms and also consider the complex nature of the offence, the lawyer pleaded.

Her daughter, who should be the suspect, is in Australia together with the complainant and would wish to seek guidance from the court on whether the mother ought to be charged on behalf of her child.

The lawyer said the suspect has been cooperating with the police in the investigations and was not a flight risk.

Prosecutors did not oppose the bond bid and only urged the court to consider the nature of the offence and the need to stop rising cases of fraud in Kenya.

The magistrate released the suspect on a Sh8 million bond, with a surety of the same amount without the option of cash bail.

Nine women nominated to the Samburu County Assembly

Geoffrey Ondieki / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Nine women have been nominated to the Samburu County Assembly in a bid to achieve fair gender representation.

Three women were on the ballot in last month's elections for the 15 ward seats, but none won. The largely patriarchal Samburu community lags behind in female representation in politics.

The Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission (IEBC) gazetted the nominated MCAs to represent marginalised groups, people with disabilities and minority groups.

Among the female nominated MCAs are Rebecca Lolosoli, Charity Lenyakopiro and Asha Mohammed, all nominated by the United Democratic Alliance (UDA). Silapia Lenamantiyo, Esther Lenolkulal, Eunice Lekirenyei and Agnes Wambua were nominated by Jubilee.

In the marginalised category are Stacy Nareyo (Jubilee) and Jane Loregae (UDA), to represent the youth and minority groups, respectively, bringing the total to nine women in the House.

Osman Dube (Jubilee) and Stephen Kagiri (UDA) were also nominated to represent people with disabilities and minorities.

As women politicians in other parts of Kenya wrestled with men for elective seats on August 9, Samburu was left behind. Few women have dared to participate in politics in the patriarchal community since independence.

Samburu culture, where most women are relegated to traditional roles, has constrained the prospects of women in political and administrative leadership. Practices such as female genital mutilation and early marriages limit their access to education, slowing their participation in labour and governance.

Only a few women seek the woman representative position that was created by the Constitution adopted in 2010. Women are yet to come out to vie for other elective posts despite deliberate efforts by government, civil society, political parties and development partners meant to achieve equity.

Samburu MP Naisula Lesuuda, the only elected woman in the pastoral region, said in a past interview that the number of Samburu women in politics is limited by deeply rooted patriarchal attitudes in the community and lack of support from families.

"As a woman, you have to get family backing to stay away from them during the campaign period to persuade [voters]. That is a very important backing that Samburu women do not get," she said previously.

Two women charged with defrauding employer of Sh2m vehicle

Angeline Ochieng / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

A Kisumu court has charged two middle-aged women with 12 counts of conspiracy to defraud a motor vehicle company. Ms Rosebella Wandere and Grace Awuor, former employees of RANA Auto Section Limited in Kisumu, are accused of defrauding their employer of a vehicle worth Sh2 million. In the first count, the two were charged with conspiracy to defraud, contrary to Section 317 of the penal code. On diverse dates between March 20, 2022 and June 16, 2022, at unknown place within the republic jointly with others not in court [they] conspired to defraud RANA Auto Section a motor vehicle worth Sh2 million, read the court particulars. In the second count, the women allegedly interfered with a computerised motor vehicle registration system, contrary to Section 5 E(a) of the Traffic Act. They allegedly entered a change of ownership of the motor vehicle registration number. On May 19, 2022, you unlawfully interfered with the computerized motor vehicle registration number plate KDD 930U Toyota Noah Silver in colour from TINSAs Motors Limited to Austin Jimmy Onoka, court documents say.

Stealing by servant

Ms Wandere and Ms Awuor also face a charge of stealing by servant, contrary to Section 281 of the penal code in the third and fourth counts. The court heard that the women, who were clerks for RANA Auto Section, stole Sh443,600 and Sh520,600, respectively, from the company. Ms Awuor also faces charges of forgery, contrary to Section 350(1) of the penal code. She allegedly forged an Equity Bank banking slip worth Sh100,000, purporting that the slip was a genuine deposit made by one Austine into a TINSAs Motor Limited account. The accused appeared before Resident Magistrate Beryl Omollo. They denied the charges and sought favourable bond terms. Their lawyers, Mr Sam Onyango and Dick Osano, claimed the two are residents of Kisumu and are not a flight risk. Mr Osano also told the court that the two were arrested on September 9 and 10 and had been in custody for eight days, and that they have children aged below six. He also said the two had been sacked by the complainant. He asked the court to grant them Sh30,000 cash bail. Magistrate Omollo released the two on a bond of Sh500,000 each and an alternative cash bail of Sh200,000. The case will be mentioned on November 20 for further directions.

Succession: Baringo Central endorses DG Kipngók's son to replace him

Florah Koech / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Ethnic politics are playing out in the succession talk in Baringo County following the demise of Deputy Governor Charles Kipngok on Wednesday last week.

Elders and the Baringo Central community where he hailed have fronted his eldest son, Felix Maiyo, 36, to succeed him. They want Governor Benjamin Cheboi to pick a replacement from that area, and specifically Mr Maiyo, saying he is equal to the task and can continue with the development agenda his father had for the people of Baringo.

Under the law, when a DG dies in office, resigns or is impeached, a governor nominates a candidate within 14 days, who must be approved by the county assembly within 60 days.

Governor Cheboi thus has until next Wednesday to nominate his new DG.

Ethnic politics

The push for the late DG's son has taken an ethnic dimension, with elders from the late Kipngoks sub-county claiming that the governor and senator positions went to Mr Cheboi and William Cheptumo from the populous Aror community in Baringo North, and the DG's seat should be retained in Baringo Central.

Locals from Kipngoks ancestral home in Emom village, Baringo Central, endorsed his son as his replacement, claiming that they supported Governor Cheboi in last month's polls because he had picked one of their own as his deputy.

Elijah Moi, an elder, insisted that the DG also pumped a lot of resources, time and energy into supporting Mr Cheboi's bid and the position should remain in the family as a mark of honour for the astute leader from their community.

The deputy governor had so much in store for us and we feel that the promises would come into fruition if they appoint his heir to take over. We need nothing short of that because we voted for the governor after he considered our son to deputise him and as an honour, he should not disappoint us, Mr Moi said.

Dominant Aror

Over the years, elders from Samor claimed, the dominant Aror community has clinched major elective seats because of their numbers and influence, disadvantaging other communities in the region.

For instance, in the 2012 General Election, Mr Cheboi, from the dominant Aror, won the governor's seat while in 2017 Mr Kiptis took over, with the woman representative seat going to Ms Gladwell Cheruiyot from Baringo North.

The elders, led by William Cherambus, said Mr Kipngok had a lot in store for voters and was the only person best suited to take up his mantle.

The elders say the DG, who died at Jomo Kenyatta International Airport (JKIA) last Wednesday while waiting to board a Kenya Airways evening flight to Mombasa, played a major role in Governor Cheboi's campaigns, and they won a landslide of 137,486 votes.

Former Eldama Ravine MP Moses Lessonet, who contested the governor's seat as an independent candidate, came in second with 60,879 votes and former governor Stanley Kiptis was third with 17,646.

We want Kipngok's son, Felix Maiyo, who has a master's degree in petroleum engineering, to take his mantle. He is of age and well conversant with the plans his late father had for Baringo locals, Mr Cherambus said.

Negotiated democracy

Locals from disadvantaged groups have repeatedly called for negotiated democracy to have all communities on board and avert a situation where all major seats in the county go to the populous Aror community.

As locals from Baringo Central, we do not want our cake to be snatched from us and for that reason, Governor Cheboi should not let us down by appointing a replacement for the deceased DG from another constituency, Mr Cherambus said amid burial arrangements for the DG.

The seat should remain with us and we have already arrived on who should take the mantle.

Burial date

Mr Kipngók will be laid to rest on September 24 at his home in Solian, Eldama Ravine sub-county, on the same day he had planned to host a thanksgiving ceremony at his Emom ancestral home.

Burial arrangements are going on at his homes in Solian and Emom, Baringo Central, where neighbours, relatives and friends have been converging.

Succession: Baringo Central endorses DG Kipngóks son to replace him

Florah Koech / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

The late DG developed breathing problems while preparing to board a Kenya Airways (KQ) flight to Mombasa, where he was to attend a Council of Governors induction workshop.

KQ said in a statement that the passenger died after developing breathing difficulties while boarding flight KQ612 that was scheduled to depart for Mombasa at 7pm.

He was pronounced dead by medical personnel at JKIA while the plane was still on the ground.

Samburu leaders seek state intervention to return stolen livestock

Geoffrey Ondieki / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Samburu leaders have demanded the unconditional return of animals stolen by suspected thieves from neighbouring Isiolo County.

Samburu Governor Jonathan Lelelit, Senator Steve Lelegwe, Samburu East MP Jackson Lentoijoni and village elders want the government to ensure that about 700 animals are returned.

They said returning the animals, the main source of residents livelihoods, was the only way of avoiding retaliation.

On Monday, rustlers stormed Kom, on the Samburu-Isiolo border, and drove away hundreds of cattle. Governor Lelelit said dozens of families were left destitute by the loss of the animals.

"We just ask the government to help return the livestock to owners here. They are reeling under the shock of losing all livestock because they entirely depend on them for a living," the governor said, as he asked herders not to retaliate.

"We have asked our people not to retaliate because we are peace-loving citizens. We just ask the government to intervene and help locals get back their livestock."

The leaders said they will pursue peaceful methods of recovering the animals. Senator Lelegwe asked acting Inspector-General of Police Noor Gabow to help recover the animals, arguing that the government has the machinery to do so.

"We are therefore asking the acting Inspector-General to send troops to recover the livestock. Tens of families here do not know their fate, because they entirely depend on these animals for a living," Dr Lelegwe said.

Mr Lentoijoni asked the government to reinstate Kenya Police Reservists (KPR) to help combat cattle rustling. He argued that police reservists would help respond to attacks alongside mainstream security agencies like the Anti Stock Theft Unit.

"We need the reservists back to help these police officers because they are not enough, he said, adding that bandit attacks went down when reservists were armed.

He urged the national government to find a long-term solution to endemic cattle theft in Samburu County.

Last month, President William Ruto claimed that elaborate mechanisms were in place to end banditry in parts of northern Kenya. He spoke to the media after being announced winner of the presidential election.

He lamented that thousands of people had been affected over the years by insecurity in Baringo, the Kerio Valley, Samburu, Turkana and Marsabit.

"We have a time-bound plan to secure bandit-prone areas. We will shortly let the country know what we have in place to secure the lives and protect the people of Kenya," Dr Ruto said.

Dr Ruto had earlier alleged that the Jubilee administration's move to withdraw NPRs from bandit-prone areas of the Rift Valley was a ploy to punish him. He spoke during the presidential debate on 26 July and claimed that the 2019 decision was politically motivated.

"I have even used my personal resources to deal with that situation because I know it was a political agenda. The withdrawal of NPR was an unfortunate act but because it was intended to punish William Ruto, he alleged.

People with disabilities protest omission from nomination list

Oscar Kakai / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

People with disabilities in West Pokot have protested their exclusion from the final list of nominees to the county assembly.

They complained that they have been sidelined from county affairs.

They urged the Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission (IEBC) to de-gazette the names of nominated MCAs, arguing that genuine nominees were expunged from the final list.

We are disappointed that political parties, including UDA, Kanu and KUP, did not include any of us in their nomination lists. I personally applied and was shortlisted but my name was missing in the final list, said Selina Longiro (UDA).

She urged Governor Simon Kachapin and local lawmakers to intervene ahead of the swearing-in slated for Wednesday September 21, 2022.

If we miss in the assembly, how will we be recognised in employment by the county government as required under the law to get 30 percent? We are being stigmatised yet this is the hustler government and we are the hustlers, she said.

Also read: Activist wants four nominees to Meru assembly quashed

A disabled member of UDA said that many disabled children in the county are in school but they lack representation.

The swearing-in of MCAs should be put on hold until the nomination issue is resolved, said Benjamin Lopuoyang, who is disabled.

The IEBC gazetted 12 people to be sworn in as nominated MCAs alongside 20 elected ward representatives in the West Pokot County Assembly.

The 12 were nominated by UDA, Kanu and KUP.

Eric Kalikwan, another disabled person, said it is against the Constitution to discriminate against them in elective and appointive positions.

I was number five on the list but my name was removed. We must go to court, he said.

Constitutional requirement

Lawyer Kevin Kachapin said that the nomination of people with disabilities to county assemblies is a constitutional requirement. They represent the interests of the marginalised group.

The challenges faced by [the disabled] are immeasurable. The alleged failure to nominate them to 21 county assemblies was a brazen disregard of the law and the threshold of equal representation, he said.

He said political parties and the IEBC had disregarded laid-down procedures and provisions of the law, arguing that skewed selections will erode the confidence and integrity of the nomination process.

Teacher from music festival, two others die in Kisumu road accident

Elizabeth Ojina / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Three people have died in a road accident involving a pickup truck and a matatu in Luanda on Kisumu-Nairobi highway. The Monday evening misfortune claimed the life of a teacher, who had participated in the ongoing National Music Festival in Kisumu.

The teacher and the driver of the pickup truck perished on the spot while the third victim died on arrival at a hospital.

Nine passengers were rushed to Jaramogi Oginga Odinga Teaching and Referral Hospital nursing various injuries.

Police reports said the driver of the pickup was trying to overtake a lorry when he hit an oncoming matatu heading to Ahero.

Plea to observe traffic rules

Sending a message of condolence to the affected families, Kisumu Governor Anyang Nyong'o asked motorists to observe traffic rules.

"I have received with shock reports of a fatal road accident that occurred at Luanda Rabuor along the Kisumu-Ahero road, involving two vehicles, a Nissan matatu and a pickup truck, on Monday evening," said Governor Nyong'o in a statement.

He added: I take this opportunity to send my heartfelt condolences to the families and colleagues of those killed in the accident and wish quick recovery to the injured who are recuperating in hospital.

The bodies of the deceased passengers were taken to the Jaramogi Oginga Odinga Teaching and Referral Hospital mortuary.

Tea workers renew fight against harvesting machines

Tom Matoke / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Tea workers have revived their push for mechanised tea harvesting to be abolished, citing massive job losses and claims that the quality of Kenyan tea has been compromised on the international market.

They appealed to President William Ruto to direct multinational tea companies to stop importing and using harvesting machines, in keeping with his bottom-up economic plans that he promised on the campaign trail.

They claim thousands have lost jobs in the tea sector since the machines were introduced, urging the President to protect jobs.

More than 70,000 tea pickers have lost their jobs in the last 10 years, with companies citing high operational costs, says the Kenya Plantation and Agriculture Workers Union (KPAWU).

Business dynamics

Tea workers say one tea machine can do the work of 2,000 people a day, while Kenya Tea Growers Association CEO Apolo Kiarie explains that tea companies had to seek ways of remaining in business and mechanical tea picking was one of them.

KPAWU leaders argue that for the economy to grow, the large number of tea workers that companies replaced with tea machines must be reinstated.

Also read: Tea picking machines remain a sticky issue in Rift Valley politics

Many tea workers struggle to make ends meet, and the harvesting machines have not made it any easier, said KPAWU national chairman Eliakim Ochieng.

The workers reminded Dr Ruto about his election campaign promises, saying he and his Kenya Kwanza brigade pledged to address the issues of tea companies.

As tea workers, we are asking President Ruto's government to ban the use of harvesting machines by tea companies to protect millions of families in Kenya and those that directly or indirectly rely on the tea industry for survival, he said.

Catch-22

The workers' demands put the President in a catch-22 situation: he has to balance the expectations to protect local jobs and the need to keep investors in the tea industry happy.

During the election campaigns, Agriculture Cabinet Secretary Peter Munya also promised to ban tea companies from importing tea machines, accusing them of creating an unemployment crisis in Kenya and citing the need to maintain the quality of Kenyan tea.

Mr Ochieng, the KPAWU chairman, claimed the machines had compromised the quality of Kenyan tea.

The workers said tea picking should be done with human hands to maintain quality.

Other presidents from eastern Africa have banned tea machines and given priority to the employment of their own people, he said.

Some of the multinational tea companies in Kenya are Eastern Produce Kenya (EPK), Williamson, James Finely and Nandi Tea.

Former MP Teddy Mwambire wins Kilifi Speaker seat

Nation Reporter / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Former Ganze MP Ganze Teddy Mwambire has been elected the new Kilifi Speaker after garnering 37 out of 51 votes.

His closest rival, Mr James Mlewa, got 13 votes while Mr Ian Amani Mkare, who was a candidate for the Kilifi North parliamentary on a Pamoja African Alliance (PAA) party ticket got a vote.

Others in the race but got zero votes are Peter Ziro, Caroline Chilango, Erick Saburi, Gerald Lewa, William Chengo and Chiringa Menza.

There has been a lot of lobbying by the Orange Democratic Party (ODM) which fronted Mr Mwambire.

Mr Mwambire lost the parliamentary seat to former Roads Chief Office Charo Kenneth Kazungu in the August 9 polls.

By law, the election of the 47 county speakers is supposed to be effected immediately once the MCAs are sworn in.

The speaker is the spokesperson of the assembly and must ensure the dignity of the assembly is upheld and presides over debates of the assembly at every sitting.

Push for pardoned convicts to be removed from DCI criminal records

George Munene / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

The presidential clemency law should be amended to enable pardoned convicts to secure gainful employment, a task force has been told.

The team, which is reviewing laws relating to the exercise of the power of mercy, sat at Embu Talent Academy and heard that the law should be more friendly to reformed convicts.

The criminal records of a pardoned person should be expunged from the Directorate of Criminal Investigations (DCI) systems once the person is released through presidential clemency, stakeholders said.

"When convicts are pardoned, their criminal records are still retained by the DCI and when they seek certificates of good conduct so that they can be employed, they can't get them, one of them said.

Therefore, the convicts remain jobless and they can start committing the same crimes for survival."

Also read: Tanzania's President Samia Suluhu pardons 5,001 prisoners

Law Society of Kenya (LSK) Embu branch chairman Duncan Rukwaro underscored the need to amend the law for the benefit of convicts.

"Many of the convicts commit crimes due to poverty. They steal for survival and when they reform in prison and are [pardoned] their criminal records should be erased so that they can access certificates of good conduct from DCI without hindrances, Mr Rukwaro said.

By doing so the government will be helping the convicts who have changed to be good citizens."

The stakeholders also recommended that vulnerable people, including pregnant mothers, the elderly and are terminally ill serving life jail terms should be allowed to serve non-custodial sentences under strict supervision.

"The vulnerable people suffer and there is no need to confine them in cells as long as they have shown remorse," said Mr Ronald Kinyua.

Embu Resident Magistrate Dorcas Endoo thanked the government for coming up with the task force.

"This team is doing a good job. We support it," she said.

Monitor offenders

But she said a multi-sectoral committee where the LSK will have a representative should be put in place to monitor offenders released through the power of mercy and ensure they are reintegrated into the community and don't commit crimes again.

The stakeholders observed that human beings, if mentored well, can change from hardcore criminals to good people and the presidential clemency law should be refined to benefit them.

They also noted that the law, if well applied, will save the government significant resources.

"Prisoners spend Sh12 million daily on food and if more convicts change their behaviour and are released, the government will save funds that can be used in development projects," said task force secretary Stephen Gitau.

Every reformed convict should be freed from prison and be financed by the government to start an income-generating project, stakeholders said.

Jerry Jackson / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

On August 29 the European Commission released updated clarifications on the application of sanctions against fertilizers produced or exported from Russia - potassium chloride, as well as complex (NPK) fertilizers containing nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium. The new EU position makes it almost impossible to supply Russian fertilizers to the global market with EU economic operators, EU infrastructure and EU territory. This decision clearly directly contradicts earlier EU statements about not applying restrictions on trade in agricultural products and fertilizers between Russia and third countries and puts people in developing countries on the verge of starvation.

It is worth recalling that back on April 8, 2022, the EU imposed sectoral sanctions on these types of fertilizers of Russian origin. The purchase, import or transfer of these products to the EU in excess of the quotas set for the EU were banned: the quotas amount to 837.5 thousand tons of potassium chloride and 1,577.8 thousand tons of other types of fertilizers containing nitrogen, phosphorus and potash. It should be noted that initially the bans did not apply to the transit of Russian fertilizers to third countries using the EU infrastructure.

UN Secretary General António Guterres told reporters on Wednesday, September 14, that "To remove the obstacles that still exist in relation to the export of Russian fertilizers is absolutely essential". "There are ... talks in relation to the possibility of Russian ammonia exports through the Black Sea," said Guterres, adding that there was a "dramatic situation" in the world fertilizer market.

"We are risking to have fertilizer market crunch," he said. "We have news from different parts of the world where the areas cultivated are much smaller than in the previous cycle, which means that we risk to have in 2022 real lack of food."

On August 10, the EU tightened sanctions against the transportation of Russian fertilizers. The European Commission extended a ban on European operators' activities related to the transit through the EU territory of fertilizers destined for third countries. Moreover, now the supply of fertilizers to third countries even without the use of the EU territory and infrastructure will be considered a violation of the sanctions. The provision of transportation, transshipment and trading services by European companies, as well as any related services, such as insurance, financial and brokerage operations and technical assistance, is now prohibited.

Updated August 29 European Commission clarification contains a significant clarification, which can be regarded as a violation of the immutable principles of international trade. According to the European Commission's decision, operators from EU states are prohibited from making payments for Russian goods delivered to Europe even before sanctions were imposed. Since the payment is part of the fulfillment of the contract, the EC actually forced European operators to unilaterally violate contractual obligations to Russian suppliers.

By imposing more and more restrictions, the European Commission cites that all these measures support the goal of sanctions, which is to significantly weaken Russia's economic base by depriving it of its most important markets for its products and greatly limiting its ability to wage war.

When imposing sanctions in the spring of 2022 after Russia's invasion of Ukraine, the European Union stated that the targets of these sanctions were the Russian government, companies producing military products or services, officials making decisions in the military sphere, and public figures loyal to the Kremlin. The EU stated that the targets of the sanctions were in no way the Russian population, which had no direct or indirect relation to the conduct of military operations.

Despite these statements, the subsequent decisions of the European bodies have actually made ordinary Russian citizens hostage to sanctions. For example, European countries have significantly restricted or frozen the issuance of visas to Russians, which has put a barrier to mass tourism. Earlier, the banking payment systems Visa and MasterCard stopped servicing cards issued in Russia, the consequences of which were felt by most Russian citizens. Fearing sanctions, many Western companies producing mass-market products - household appliances, clothing, food, etc. - curtailed their activities in Russia, which also affected the interests of large segments of the population.

At the same time, European officials publicly continue their rhetoric that anti-Russian sanctions are not aimed at the population.

The EU sanctions race has also hit Europeans in the form of higher energy, food prices, and unprecedented inflation.

Jerry Jackson / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Social tension is growing, protest sentiments in many European cities are gathering residents for rallies, and people are more and more openly expressing their dissatisfaction with the reverse effect of the imposed anti-Russian sanctions.

Now the European Union, represented by its supreme executive body, has gone even further, in fact extending sanctions to the population of the developing world. The prohibition on servicing Russian fertilizer transit operations to third countries has devastating consequences in the form of severe fertilizer shortages, declining agriculture, and the spread of hunger among billions of people in developing countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

The new EU clarifications directly contradict both the numerous public statements previously made by European politicians and the general principles enshrined in the preamble to the seventh sanctions package, which proclaims food and energy security worldwide as the EU's priority. In particular, the preamble states that none of the measures provided for in the sanctions regulation is intended to restrict trade in agricultural products, including wheat and fertilizers, between third countries and Russia.

Moreover, the EU grossly violates the "Memorandum of Understanding between the Russian Federation and the UN Secretariat on Facilitating the Promotion of Russian Food and Fertilizers to World Markets," signed on July 22 in Istanbul. The memorandum was supposed to solve the problem of unimpeded supplies of Russian food and fertilizers to the world market, as well as to remove obstacles in the area of finance, insurance and other transit service operations.

However, this did not happen. In practice, the EU's sectoral sanctions on fertilizers have only cemented the impossibility of supplying such products to third countries involving economic operators, infrastructure or EU territory. Additional cynicism of the whole situation is given by the fact that the EU has set quotas on fertilizers in its interests, and removed them from the sanctions.

Meanwhile, Russia is ready to donate to African countries hundreds of thousands of tons of fertilizers stuck in European ports because of sanctions. If they are unblocked. The situation in the port of Riga (Latvia) is paradoxical. A vessel loaded with 55 thousand tons of potassium chloride produced by the Russian company Uralchem has been anchored there since early March (i.e., before the sanctions were imposed). Latvian authorities have been unable to make a decision regarding this cargo for more than six months, not allowing the ship to leave the port or to moor and unload the fertilizers.

Because of the actions of the EU, another document signed on July 22 between the UN, Russia and Turkey - the Initiative on the Safe Transportation of Grain and Foodstuffs from Ukrainian Ports - is actually not being implemented. - The so-called "grain deal". The document prescribes an algorithm for the export of Ukrainian agricultural products from the Black Sea ports controlled by Kiev, the task of coordinating which has been taken over by the UN. But out of 2 million tons of grain exported from Ukraine, only 3% was sent to the poorest countries, the rest went to the European Union countries. And since the restrictions on the export of Russian grain and fertilizers were never actually lifted, Russia may refuse to participate in the grain deal.

U.N. chief Antonio Guterres said he spoke with Russian President Vladimir Putin on Wednesday, 14 September about Ukrainian Black Sea grain exports and that he was hopeful a U.N.-brokered deal would be maintained and expanded to include Russian ammonia.

Following the logic of events, unfortunately further spread of bans and sanctions by the European Union on world trade in other categories of goods cannot be ruled out. And this means that the sanctions war could turn into a global humanitarian catastrophe in the future.

Bankелеle: Who owns government officials Tweets?

Bankелеle / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

In the last few days, Interior Cabinet Secretary Fred Matiang'i appears to have taken down his verified Twitter account and this has sparked some debate on if it contained information that he should have retained and handed over to be preserved with the National Archives.

Last week, State House had an online transition from President Uhuru Kenyatta to President William Ruto with the profile picture changing to the new President on the day he took the oath of office. The new President's account is still a work in process, changing its tone, subject and authorship. A tweet was put up announcing an about-turn in diplomacy between Morocco and Western Sahara that was later pulled down.

While some commentators and bloggers are deleting tweets created in the heat of the election season, people who serve in government, and who put up content on their official handles, should not have that luxury.

Twitter represents a good source of information as government departments and ministries are not good at maintaining websites. You can search a Twitter timeline and see breaking news and note official events that happened, but which do not appear on the organization's websites.

Matiang'i's tenure as CS had three phases; first from April 2013 to November 2015, when he was the CS for ICT, then at the Education Ministry to January 2018. President Kenyatta appointed him to the Interior Ministry in 2017 when Joseph Ole Nkaisery passed away and held that role until now. Also in January 2019, he was appointed as Chairman of the National Development Cabinet Committee.

Matiang'i joined Twitter in April 2013 and ran his verified account until sometime in September 2022. With a tool like Internet Archive "Wayback Machine," you can observe his tweets on different topics like digital migration, securing national examinations and police reforms and see an evolution of writing styles. It was certainly Matiang'i's Twitter account, but it also represents an in-built archive of his decade heading important dockets in the government. He sent 1,800 tweets, averaging one per day and had 1.3 million followers at the end.

His earlier tweets at the ICT and Education ministries were in a personal style and you feel that he was the one in charge of his account, sending tweets about his daily activities as he also responded to issues raised such as negotiations on teacher salaries, protecting journalists and calling out untruths about leaders.

Later, as Cabinet Secretary for the Interior, his tweets were more comprehensive. You sense that they were done by a professional team capturing his daily activities as the CS, articulating government policies, with multiple pictures, and extracts of his speeches, as they happen, and tying in with activities at other agencies like the National Police Service. The Interior Ministry's Twitter account would have similar content, and the same message, but in a different style, not merely re-tweeting each other, likely by a different author with a more official style for the government.

In exiting from Twitter, CS Matiang'i may be following his boss, President Kenyatta who in March 2019 disconnected from his verified Twitter that had 3.6 million followers as well as other platforms. While State House said it was because of unauthorised access to the account, in later years the President would say it was for peace of mind from the online noise and useless abuse.

But, these days, Twitter has more tools to protect its celebrated authors. He could have made his account private or chosen to filter feedback by blocking users or only allowing people he named to reply.

Finally deactivating a Twitter account makes the account go invisible to readers, but it might not be deleted and remains available only to him as the author. He may have taken his account down to have a break, or for some quiet time perhaps to write a book in peace, by using his Twitter timeline as a good research source. With 1.3 million followers, Matiang'i's verified account will be a useful medium as he shifts to a new life phase or career.

Learn to eat well, but not our money

Macharia Gaitho / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

It is, indeed, great that President William Ruto recognises the dire need for lessons in etiquette around his dinner table. We do recall that in the early years of Independence, Jeans School, in Kabete, the present-day Kenya School of Government, developed such a programme for wives of the emerging African elite.

After nearly 60 years, we have a whole crop of leaders, and not just their spouses, who still need to be trained on how to handle a fork and knife.

That viral video of Deputy President Rigathi Gachagua stuffing cake into his mouth on Inauguration Day obviously was an eye-opener for President Ruto. The DP and other rustic elected leaders aside, we also boast that hustlers and Mama Mboga will be an integral part of the government. Those of wanting social skills will not be admitted to the high table before undergoing a crash course on how to conduct themselves like the hated dynasties.

We have to hope, however, that the curriculum at Kabete will not be limited to table manners, which knife, fork, spoon and glass to use with each course, and how not to drink from the finger bowl or pile the dessert on top of the main dish.

Overflowing plates

The training programme must also encompass gluttony. The Kenya Kwanza leaders around President Ruto must learn not to fill their plates to overflowing levels. Beyond that, they must also learn that grabbing public resources is a criminal offence.

Even before the Cabinet is appointed, we are seeing fellows openly casting covetous glances at the public purse.

The energy parastatals seem to be a particular target for those eyeing lucrative tenders, as is the giant transport, public works and infrastructure sector, which denizens around former President Uhuru Kenyatta had converted into personal piggy banks.

Fellows in the new regime are making all the right noises about dealing decisively with State Capture and the crony capitalism that was the hallmark of the Jubilee government. However, it is all too evident that, for many of them, it is not about ending corruption, but about it being their turn to eat. Again.

All that noise about the blatant corruption all too evident around the family and close confidants of the former president is driven by self-interest. Were not seeing genuine moral outrage about grand corruption at the heart of government but outrage that they were kept off the feeding trough that was the exclusive preserve of a few.

Campaign rhetoric

Those fellows claiming that they were targeted for investigations and prosecution are not saying that they did not steal, but that others who also stole were left untouched.

From campaign rhetoric that now seems to be government policy, we have a genuine fear that a whole crop of politicians under investigation or already indicted for corruption, assault, murder and other serious criminal offences will employ political muscle to have the charges dropped.

We heard just the other day Mr Gachagua warn the police against harassing governors and other elected leaders who were being investigated for corruption.

Director of Criminal Investigations George Kinoti may, indeed, have gone overboard with his theatrics and seeming over-enthusiasm on some investigations. But that cannot provide justification for any policy that makes one law for elected leaders and another for ordinary citizens.

Kenya Kwanza sycophants

Mr Kinoti, an object of hate for Kenya Kwanza sycophants, will presumably be one of the first public officers to be ejected by the new regime. But his successor will be a total and abject failure if they accept that their brief is to turn a blind eye to crime by those who claim that they are close to the President.

One of President Ruto's first executive orders was to grant financial autonomy to the Inspector-General of the National Police Service. Mr Hilary Mutyambai is now the accounting officer rather than some principal secretary in the Office of the President.

That looks like a well-meaning order on the principle that financial autonomy also translates to operational autonomy. The police service is now empowered to operate independently and properly insulated from directions by any other power or authority.

That other power or authority that the Constitution and laws bar from interfering with the police starts from the President downwards.

It, therefore, makes it nonsense for President Ruto to grant the police autonomy but, before the ink is dry on the executive order, Deputy President Gachagua is countermanding it with irregular roadside decrees purporting to place elected leaders above the law.

It must be made clear that leaders dont have a licence to eat public resources.

Too weak to cry: Famine looms over Somalia's children

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

As flies buzz over his tiny body, two-year-old Sadak Ibrahim barely whimpers, too weak to cry or shoo them away -- a heartbreaking glimpse of the hunger crisis gripping Somalia.

The Horn of Africa nation is on the brink of a second famine in just over a decade, enduring its worst drought in 40 years after failed rainy seasons since late 2020 wiped out crops and livestock.

With a fifth monsoon forecast to fail, the United Nations warned this month that time was running out to save lives as it urged donors to contribute more to the relief effort.

Read: President Mohamud: Somalia severely affected by drought

UN humanitarian chief Martin Griffiths said the situation was worse than the 2011 famine when 260,000 people died in the country, more than half of them children under the age of six.

Aid is slowly making its way to Somalia following delays caused by the war in Ukraine, which also sent the cost of transport and emergency supplies soaring.

But many fear the help will arrive too late for the country's youngest victims like Sadak, with around 730 children already reported dead in nutrition centres between January and July this year, according to UNICEF.

At De Martino Hospital in the capital Mogadishu, Sadak's anxious mother Fadumo Daud sat vigil by the toddler's bedside, a feeding tube dangling from his face, as she prayed for a miracle.

"He is the only child I have, and he is very sick as you can see," the young woman told AFP, recounting the three-day journey that brought her to Mogadishu from Baidoa -- one of the epicentres of the crisis.

'Dramatic increase'

In recent years, climate disasters have increasingly become the main driver of migration in Somalia, which is also grappling with a brutal 15-year Islamist insurgency.

Every day, dozens of people stream into camps set up for displaced families in Mogadishu.

The International Rescue Committee (IRC) non-profit runs seven health and nutrition centres in and around the capital, but their resources are sharply stretched with the crisis showing no signs of abating.

"The number of new arrivals has increased dramatically starting from June this year," IRC nutrition officer Faisa Ali told AFP.

Most of the children turn up malnourished, she said, with their numbers trebling from a maximum of 13 a day in May to 40 now.

A mother of 10, Nuunay Adan Durow fled her home and travelled 300 kilometres (200 miles) to find medical help for her three-year-old son Hassan Mohamed, his limbs swollen due to severe malnutrition.

"For the last three years, we have not harvested anything due to lack of rain," Durow told AFP, describing how she was forced to trek for two hours daily to find water for her family.

"We faced a terrible situation," the 35-year-old said, cradling Hassan in her arms as they awaited medical attention at an IRC centre on the outskirts of Mogadishu.

'The worst cases'

The drought has also affected parts of Kenya and Ethiopia but the risks for Somalia are particularly grave, with 200,000 people in danger of starvation and around 1.5 million children facing acute malnutrition by next month, the UN says.

The crisis has not spared even traditionally fertile regions such as Lower Shabelle, where drought-stricken communities would seek refuge in the past, hoping to find sustenance there.

"We used to farm and get vegetables to feed our children before the drought affected us," Fadumo Ibrahim Hassan, 35, told AFP.

Too weak to cry: Famine looms over Somalia's children

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Now "we live on whatever God gives us", the widowed mother-of-six said.

A recent arrival in Mogadishu, her two-year-old daughter Yusro's condition had deteriorated to the point that the IRC staff could no longer care for her.

Weighing just 5.8 kilogrammes (12.8 pounds) -- half that of a healthy girl the same age -- Yusro was dangerously malnourished, according to the IRC medical team, who told AFP she urgently needed to be admitted to a hospital.

At De Martino Hospital, doctor Fahmo Ali told AFP that each day brought more sick, malnourished children into her care.

One person dying of hunger every four seconds worldwide- NGOs

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

One person is estimated to be dying of hunger every four seconds, over 200 NGOs warned Tuesday, urging decisive international action to "end the spiralling global hunger crisis".

In an open letter addressing world leaders gathering in New York for the United Nations General Assembly, 238 organisations from 75 countries, including Oxfam, Save the Children and Plan International expressed outrage at skyrocketing hunger levels.

"A staggering 345 million people are now experiencing acute hunger, a number that has more than doubled since 2019," they said in a statement.

"Despite promises from world leaders to never allow famine again in the 21st century, famine is once more imminent in Somalia. Around the world, 50 million people are on the brink of starvation in 45 countries," they said.

Pointing out that as many as 19,700 people are estimated to be dying of hunger every day, the NGOs said that this translates to one person dying of hunger every four seconds.

"It is abysmal that with all the technology in agriculture and harvesting techniques today we are still talking about famine in the 21st century," Mohanna Ahmed Ali Eljabaly from the Yemen Family Care Association, one of the letter's signatories, said in the statement.

"This is not about one country or one continent and hunger never only has one cause. This is about the injustice of the whole of humanity," he said.

"We must not wait a moment longer to focus both on providing immediate lifesaving food and longer-term support so people can take charge of their futures and provide for themselves and their families."

Tough rules in Ivory Coast schools: Expelling 'losers' to boost grades

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Youngsters in Ivory Coast return to school this week with a sword of Damocles above their heads: those with average grades of less than 8.5 out of 10 will be excluded at the end of the year.

The measure is an old one brought back by authorities in the hope of raising the general standard of education in the west African country -- prohibiting any pupil with an unacceptable grade from pursuing their studies.

In the working-class district of Adjame, at the heart of the commercial capital Abidjan, the rule stirs comment at small stalls selling school supplies, where people also exchange secondhand textbooks.

"What are we going to do with the students who will be excluded? It's too drastic!" exclaims Mariam Eid, a mother of three.

Also read: Do not scrap CBC, enhance it, private teachers, university dons plead

"We're going to turn them into bandits. We want the teaching to be up to par, but one step at a time," she adds, while making sure a worn mathematics book has no missing pages before she buys it.

But at the Pierre Amondji college in Adjame -- where the motto "Who seeks perfection obtains excellence" is displayed in capital letters on the walls of the courtyard -- the measure is generally well received among the students.

Redouble efforts

"I find it positive," says Djenebou, who is taking the baccalaureate school leavers' exam at the end of the year.

"It will incite us to redouble our efforts and work harder."

"It's a good measure. The goal is to improve our knowledge so we move on with solid training," adds his classmate Seydou.

But Seydou also hopes the regulation will not encourage fraud, and in particular the blackmailing of students by certain teachers in exchange for good exam grades.

"Some teachers are difficult... The marks are very low and to move on to the next class we have to negotiate with them," the young student says.

The minister of national education, Mariatou Kone, who is seeing in the second new school year of her time in office, defends a regulation that is far from universally welcomed.

"This is a measure that has existed since the 1970s and that we are restoring to encourage students to work and fight against mediocrity," she tells AFP.

Also read: World is off track to meet SDGs, new report finds

"Students will not be barred from the school system. There are bridges between technical education and vocational training," Kone adds, keen "to reassure parents".

The minister says students who don't get the grades will not follow the standard curriculum, but they will be able to learn a trade or different skills.

"We must not leave anybody aside. The state must redirect these students to training in other trades," insists Claude Kadio Aka, president of the Organization of the Parents of Pupils and Students in Ivory Coast (Opeeci).

"All our children are useful in the development of the country," Aka declares.

Measure of averages

Minister Kone stresses the aim of the reform is "to raise the standard" of Ivorian schools and to give diplomas their full worth.

In the past two years, the success rate for the baccalaureate has hovered around 30 percent, compared with 45 percent in previous years.

"Our children are in advanced classes and don't even know how to write an elementary sentence," protests Christelle Okingni, who has four children in school and welcomes the initiative.

But the "measure of averages" will not suffice to improve a school system which is sorely lacking in resources.

"Students regularly rise up to denounce the lack of classrooms and desks," points out a teacher of French from an establishment in Bouake, the country's second city, who prefers to remain anonymous.

Tough rules in Ivory Coast schools: Expelling 'losers' to boost grades

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

It is not uncommon in Ivory Coast to find classrooms with 60 or even 80 pupils, while a lack of teachers sometimes cuts short the school year by several weeks.

"Last year, we had a mathematics and physics teacher only after the first term, it's not good for us students," laments Aya, a middle-school pupil at a college in Bouake.

The matter of school fees has arisen more than ever at a time when worldwide inflation is not sparing low-income households in Ivory Coast.

Officially, Ivorian state schools are free, but the price of uniforms, satchels and supplies can quickly put a strain on the family budget -- not to mention illegal registration fees sometimes requested by certain establishments.

Last week, the government announced a free distribution of six million textbooks and 5.3 million kits of classroom supplies, as well as the provision of 167,000 tables.

Death toll from Lassa fever rises to 171 in Nigeria

XINHUA / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Abuja,

The death toll of Lassa fever in Nigeria this year has risen to 171 despite measures by the government to reduce infections across the country, the Nigeria Centers for Disease Control (NCDC) has said.

In its latest Lassa fever situation report, the NCDC says there have been a total of 917 confirmed cases, with 6,660 suspected cases recorded since January 1.

In the week from September 5 to 11 alone, eight new confirmed cases and one death were recorded.

So far, the countrys 25 states have recorded at least one confirmed case across 102 out of the 774 local government areas, the public health agency said in a report dated September 18.

With the death toll rising to 171, the NCDC said the case fatality rate was 18.6 percent, lower than that for the same period last year, which was 23.3 percent.

The agency said the predominant age group affected is 21-30 years, with the male-to-female ratio for confirmed cases being 1:0.8.

According to the World Health Organization, Lassa fever is an acute viral hemorrhagic illness caused by the Lassa virus, a member of the arenavirus family of viruses.

Humans usually become infected with the virus through exposure to food or household items contaminated with urine or faeces of infected mastomys rats.

The disease is endemic in the rodent population in parts of West Africa.

In some cases, Lassa fever has similar symptoms to malaria, appearing between one and three weeks after exposure to the virus.

In mild cases, the disease causes fever, fatigue, weakness, and headache.

The NCDC said it remained committed to supporting state public health teams to achieve the goal of reducing the fevers case fatality rate to a single digit.

The disease control agency said it is currently distributing medical response commodities to states and treatment centres as part of measures to control the spread of the disease.

UN report warns of crimes against humanity in Ethiopia

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

UN investigators say they believe Ethiopia's government is behind ongoing crimes against humanity in Tigray, and warn the resumption of the conflict there increased the risk of "further atrocity crimes".

In its first report, the Commission of Human Rights Experts on Ethiopia on Monday said it had found evidence of widespread violations by all sides since fighting erupted in the northern Tigray region in November 2020.

The commission, created by the UN Human Rights Council last December and made up of three independent rights experts, said it had "reasonable grounds to believe that, in several instances, these violations amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity".

The experts listed a long line of horrific violations, from extrajudicial killings to intentional starvation and rape and sexual violence perpetrated on a "staggering scale".

Read: Ethiopia conflict taking a toll on women, girls

And they highlighted in particular the situation in Tigray, where the government and its allies have denied around six million people access to basic services, including the internet and banking, for more than a year.

Severe restrictions on humanitarian access have left 90 percent of the region's population in dire need of assistance.

The report said there were "reasonable grounds to believe that the Federal Government and allied regional State governments have committed and continue to commit the crimes against humanity of persecution on ethnic grounds and other inhumane acts".

They were "intentionally causing great suffering or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health based on their ongoing denial and obstruction of humanitarian assistance to Tigray", the report said.

In a statement, commission chair Kaari Betty Murungi described the humanitarian crisis in Tigray as "shocking, both in terms of scale and duration".

"The widespread denial and obstruction of access to basic services, food, healthcare, and humanitarian assistance is having a devastating impact on the civilian population," she said.

She condemned likely crimes against humanity and warned that the government appeared to be "using starvation as a method of warfare".

Murungi called on the government to "immediately restore basic services and ensure full and unfettered humanitarian access".

She also urged Tigrayan forces to "ensure that humanitarian agencies are able to operate without impediment".

Since war broke out in November 2020, thousands have died, and many more have been forced to flee their homes as the conflict expanded from Tigray to the neighbouring regions of Amhara and Afar.

A truce in March had raised hopes for a peaceful resolution of the war, but those were dashed when combat resumed last month.

"With a resumption of hostilities in northern Ethiopia, there is a very real risk of further civilian suffering and further atrocity crimes," Murungi warned.

Even before the fighting resumed, the experts said they had found evidence that rape and sexual violence had been perpetrated on a "staggering scale" since the conflict erupted, especially targeting Tigrayan women and girls.

An earlier joint investigation by the UN rights office and Ethiopia's Human Rights Commission determined that possible war crimes and crimes against humanity had been committed by all sides.

Tigrayan authorities welcomed the report, with a spokesman telling AFP they had "always maintained" that Ethiopia's government was responsible for crimes against humanity in the region.

Monday's report meanwhile also found reasonable grounds to believe that Tigrayan forces had committed war crimes, including large-scale killings of Amhara civilians, rape and sexual violence.

The experts voiced alarm at their findings, which they said "reflect profound polarisation and hatred along ethnic lines in Ethiopia".

"This has created a disturbing cycle of extreme violence and retribution, which raises the imminent threat of further and more pronounced atrocity crimes," their report warned.

UN report warns of crimes against humanity in Ethiopia

AFP / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

The report, due to be presented to the rights council on September 22, made a number of recommendations, including that all parties to the conflict "immediately cease hostilities and violations... including those that might amount to war crimes or crimes against humanity".

It calls on the UN rights office to ensure "full monitoring" of the situation in Ethiopia, and urges the Ethiopian government, its Eritrean ally and authorities in Tigray to investigate and bring all perpetrators of abuses to justice

Malkia Strikers land in the Netherlands for World Championships

Samuel Gacharira / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

In Amsterdam, Netherlands

Malkia Strikers Tuesday arrived at the Schiphol Airport here in Amsterdam, Netherlands on time for their seventh appearance at the FIVB World Championships.

The national women's volleyball team have had their best preparations for a global competition in ages having trained for two months in São Paulo, Brazil before spending a week in Belgrade, Serbia courtesy of sponsors Mozzart Bet.

The two-month training was organised by the International Volleyball Federation (FIVB) through the Volleyball Empowerment Programme and supported by the National Olympic Committee of Kenya (NOC-K).

Assistant coach Paul Bitok said they are impressed by the teams progress citing the 3-0 win over Serbia B last Sunday as evidence that the girls are in the right shape for the global competition.

Its the first time we have good preparations for an international competition and we are happy with the level. We have played over 15 friendly matches and its important that we won the last one since it has given the girls the right mood for the Championship, said Bitok. The World Championships will be competitive but we are ready for it. We want to qualify for the second round.

Bitok noted that the one-week camp in Serbia helped the team acclimatise to European weather conditions. He revealed that they are in negotiations with two countries to play friendly matches ahead of their opener against hosts Netherlands on Friday.

Its important that we arrive early because there are some areas we need to polish like reception and defence before our first match."

Generally, there has been a lot of improvement in almost all departments like service, reception, attack and blocking but we need to push it more to be at around 70 per cent. We are talking to some countries like Canada and Colombia who are in different pools to see if we can play friendly matches with them. It will help us to fine-tune for the Netherlands match, observed Bitok.

Kenya are in Pool A alongside hosts Netherlands, European champions Italy, Cameroon, Belgium and Puerto Rico. Malkia Strikers need to win at least two matches to be among the four teams that will qualify for the second round.

Skipper Mercy Moim said the team is in high spirits after sponsors Mozzart Bet Tuesday promised the team $1,000 (Sh120,000) bonus each if they reach the second round for the first time in history.

We are grateful to FIVB, NOC-K and our sponsors for the support they have given us. Its the best preparation the team has ever had and the girls are in high spirits. The bonuses promised by Mozzart Bet have just come at the right time and its a good challenge to us as a team, said Moim.

We also appeal to the new government led by President (William) Ruto to come on board and play their part by paying our allowances.

We have been away from Kenya for almost three months and some of us are parents with responsibilities back home. We are now in competition mood and we dont want our focus to be diverted. The team is ready to make Kenya proud and make history in the Netherlands.

Kenya will be based at Apeldoorn but will play their Pool A matches at Arnhem.

Kenya qualify for Africa Twenty20 Cup semis

Victor Otieno / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Kenya Tuesday progressed to the semi-finals of the 2022 Africa Cricket Association (ACA) Twenty20 (T20) Cup Final after Tanzania defeated Malawi by 44 runs in the final Group B clash.

The eight-team competition is taking place at Sahara Park Willowmoore Cricket Stadium in Johannesburg, South Africa. Kenya is ranked second behind Uganda.

Tanzania progressed to the semi-finals as the top Group B team with six points, two above Kenya which is the only other team that made the cut from the pool.

For Malawi to qualify for the semis at the expense of Kenya, they needed to beat Tanzania with a high run rate.

In the match, Malawi won the toss and chose to field.

Tanzania set a target of 170 runs for the loss of eight wickets in 20-overs of their innings. Malawi were not successful in chasing the target as Tanzania restricted them to 126 runs for the loss of four wickets in 20-overs of their innings.

Malawi finished third with two points while winless Cameroon finished last with zero points. In the semis set for Wednesday, Kenya will lock-horns with Group A leaders Uganda.

Uganda also amassed six points having won all their three matches. Botswana is the other team that made the cut from the pool having finished second with four points.

Ghana finished third with two points while winless Mozambique finished last.

Tanzania will face Botswana at Sahara Park Willowmoore Cricket Stadium from 9.30am local time while Uganda and Kenya will clash at the same venue from 2pm local time. Kenya are eying the crown in the competition.

Coach David Obuya's men also want to improve their ranking in the mens International Cricket Council (ICC) standings.

While Uganda have remained 26th with 3927 points, Kenya have dropped by two places to 30th with 2630 points.

Gor Mahia end BetAfriq deal, court SportPesa as new sponsor

Cecil Odongo / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Gor Mahia on Tuesday confirmed they had terminated their shirt sponsorship deal with gaming firm Betafriq.

This comes just two months after K'Ogalo and the betting firm signed a Sh229m three year deal on July 12 in a colourful ceremony at a Nairobi Hotel.

After dumping Betafriq, K'Ogalo are said to be close to signing another deal with SportPesa said to be worth Sh80 million per season.

Gor Mahia Secretary General Sam Ochola confirmed the development saying they mutually agreed to terminate the deal with Betafriq and will this week announce the new deal with SportPesa.

"We got a communication from Betafriq and we have mutually ended the contract we had with them. It was a great opportunity working with Betafriq and we really thank them for the support they gave us. As a club, we are still ready to work with them in future because we have not parted ways in a bad manner," Ochola told Nation Sport.

"There have been negotiations going and if all goes well then, we shall launch the deal on Friday. However, that is subject to confirmation," he added.

In August, SportPesa confirmed that the Betting Control and Licensing Board (BCLB) had issued them with a licence for the 2022-2023 year.

The company had ended its operations in Kenya in October 2019 due to the failure to resolve a long-standing tax dispute with the Kenya Revenue Authority.

In 2015, the giant gaming firm sponsored the Kenyan Premier League on a four-and-a-half-year deal worth Sh450 million before exiting in 2019.

In 2016 SportPesa also sponsored both Gor and AFC Leopards to a tune of Sh65 million and Sh45 million per season respectively but terminated the deal in 2018.

Currently, SportPesa sponsor National Super League side Murang'a Seal which has its base at St Sebastian Park in Murang'a County.

SportPesa Chief Executive Officer Ronald Karauri was elected Kasarani Member of Parliament in the August 9 General Elections.

Before the Betafriq deal, Gor and betting another firm, Betsafe, had also terminated their sponsorship which had run for only two seasons.

School Games: Kenya go top of medal standings in Arusha

Brian Yonga / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

In Arusha, Tanzania

Kenya topped the athletics medal table as the discipline started on Tuesday on day five of the Federation of East Africa Secondary Schools Sports Association (Feasssa) Games at the Sheikh Abeid Stadium here in Arusha.

The country led in both the boys and girls categories with eight medals in each. The boys won three gold, three silver and two bronze medals, while the girls scooped four gold, one silver and three bronze medals.

Uganda ended the day second in both categories, with the boys bagging seven medals (four gold, two silver and one bronze), as the girls took home five medals one gold, three silver and one bronze. Tanzania and Rwanda followed in the next positions of both genders.

The hosts finished with six medals (two silver and four bronze) in the boys section and two in the girls category (one silver and one bronze). Rwandan athletes did not win any medals on the opening day of the two-day athletics programme.

Kenya's medal harvest was started by Shadrack Tuituek, who won gold in the 10,000m after clocking 30 minutes and 32.7 seconds, as Tanzanian Mahamudu Katama finished second in 30:39.5, and Kenya's Hezron Krop took bronze after timing 31:01.5.

Tuituek, a Form Three student at St Albert Iringithathi Mixed Secondary School in Nyeri County, attributed his victory to good preparations.

We allowed the Tanzanians to control the race early on before we took control. I was signaling Hezron to get behind me, so that we could make it a 1-2 finish, but I am still excited that both of us got medals for our country, Tuituek said on Tuesday.

I won the national title and I am very excited to have completed the double. The chilly morning weather prevented us from getting good times, but I hope this success is the start of many to come, he added.

Next up, the country scooped gold in both boys and girls 1500m with Frankline Kimutai and Mary Nyaboke winning gold. Kimutai, a Form Two student at Kimuron Secondary School, came home in 3:56.8, ahead of Ugandan Raymond Omara (3:57.7) and Tanzania's Tiluli Masanja Machiman (3:58.0).

Minutes later, the Kenyan girls were not left behind as Mary Nyaboke led her teammate, Diana Chepteek in winning gold and silver in the four-lap race. Nyaboke led from gun to tape to win in four minutes and 27.5 seconds as Chepteek took silver after clocking 4:30.5.

Tanzania won the bronze medal courtesy of Revina Nalubwa Magobe, who crossed the finish line in 4:32.7.

It was an interesting race and we showed our dominance controlling it from the start. Our opponents could not keep up with our pace and we are glad our tactics worked well today, said Nyaboke, a Form Two student at Keberesi Secondary School.

In the girls 5000m, Pamela Kosgei obliterated the field to win the race in 17 minutes and 15.8 seconds, well ahead of second-placed Scarlet Chemutai of Uganda (17:20.9) and Tanzania's Neema Nyaisawa Siluli (17:24.8).

I got a lot of experience running in the World Under-20 Athletics Championships in Cali, and despite not winning any medal, that helped me a lot in this race today, said Pamela, younger sister of World Marathon record holder, Brigid Kosgei.

Kenyan boys also secured gold in Discus, High Jump and Javelin to cap off a good day in both track and field events.

Golden-girl Angella Okutoyi returns home from US

Geoffrey Anene / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Wimbledon junior doubles champion Angella Okutoyi returned home on Monday after a record-breaking year where she competed in the worlds four most important junior tournaments Australian Open, Roland Garros, Wimbledon and US Open.

She said she is happy with her performance throughout the year which played a huge part in being awarded five-year full scholarship in US colleges.

The 2021 Africa Under-18 singles winner was offered scholarships by over 30 colleges in the USA. In the company of Tennis Kenya Secretary General Wanjiru Mbugua, she visited the University of Alabama, University of Central Florida, University of North Carolina and California in the last 10 days.

She hopes to choose one of them where she will pursue both tennis and a degree in Business Management.

The US has the best colleges for sports. Its really good to have those scholarships. Im sure whichever I choose will help me in the future and in my tennis future. I mean it is good and Im really looking forward to it, said Okutoyi, who got the chance to see the great facilities at the universities they visited.

The 2018 Kenya Open champion is grateful for the opportunity she got to be at the US Open for the first time.

She thanked the International Tennis Federation (ITF), Grand Slam Player Development Programme (GSPDP) and her coach and family and everyone who has supported her.

I enjoyed every single match I played, explained the 18-year-old after her last Grand Slam as a junior where she reached the second round in both singles and doubles at the Flushing Meadows in New York.

Okutoyi, who won the J1 Repentigny doubles title with her partner Malwina Rowinska in Canada just before the US Open, now has a career-high ranking of 49 in ITF junior rankings after she climbed three places on September 12.

Im happy that Im inside the top-50 now which is my career best.

Nick Mwendwa, FKF officials return to Kandanda House

Nick Mwendwa, FKF officials return to Kandanda House

Football Kenya Federation President Nick Mwendwa on Tuesday led other officials of the body to the Goal Project, Kandanda House at Kasarani, over 10 months after they were kicked out by Sports Cabinet Secretary Amina Mohamed.

Mwendwa led FKF Vice President Doris Petra, Secretary General Barry Otieno FKF's Head of Integrity Michael Kamure among others to the facility which had been locked after their unceremonious removal from office.

Together with other FKF National Executive Members, Mwendwa was hounded out of office on November 11, 2021 by Sports CS Amina Mohamed after an audit on the federations accounts alleged misuse of funds.

Having been charged in court with four counts of fraud, Mwendwa - in a November 29 letter addressed to FKF NEC - said he had transferred his functions to his deputy Petra as he sought to clear his name.

Mohamed appointed a FKF Caretaker Committee for an initial six-month tenure before it mutated into the Transition Committee. Amina extended the Transition Committee's term for two months on August 16.

It is not yet clear the fate of the Committee as FKF plans to return to office.

Mwendwa was arrested on several occasions and charged with fraud, but the case was withdrawn under Section 87 of the Penal Code on July 6.

The Director of Public Prosecutions would then charge Mwendwa afresh at Kiambu Law Courts a day later, but the FKF boss would obtain a court order from the High Court to stop any fresh charges against him.

Mwendwa on September 9 wrote to Fifa President Gianni Infantino informing him that he was ready to go back to office after he has stepped aside to deal with his cases.

Lady Justice Esther Maina fixed September 21 as the day of ruling on whether the fresh charges filed against Mwendwa are legal and constitutional.

Reference is made to my letter dated November 29, 2021 with regard to the interim transfer of my powers and responsibilities as FKF President to the FKF Vice president.

In this regard, following the withdrawal of charges by the Director of Public Prosecution on July 8, 2022, I hereby wish to inform your good office that I have resumed my duties as the FKF president, with immediate effect, in accordance with Article 42 of the FKF constitution (2017), said Mwendwa in the letter to Infantino.

The country is serving a suspension imposed by Fifa on February 24 for government interference.

Fifa's conditions before lifting the suspension were for the government to return the running of the sport to FKF and the Goal Project offices to be re-opened.

It remains to be seen if the world football governing body will now lift the suspension in the coming days.

Four presidents later, Kipchoge not limited, seeks Berlin encore

Elias Makori / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

Eliud Kipchoges international running career has transcended four Kenyan presidents.

When he finished fifth in the junior race at the 2002 IAAF World Cross Country Championships at the Leopardstown Racecourse in Dublin, Ireland, the late Daniel arap Moi was president.

Kipchoges pro career has run astride Mwai Kibakis and Uhuru Kenyattas combined 20-year rule, the distance running G.O.A.T. having launched his marathon career during the late President Kibakis regime and shattering the world marathon record in President Kenyattas final term.

In fact, when Kipchoge made his international debut in Dublin, his teammate in the Global Sports Communication stable, womens metric mile superstar Faith Chepngetich Kipyegon, was an eight-year-old child!

Kipchoges longevity, focus and determination are legendary.

Only Kenenisa Bekele, Ethiopias distance running legend, has stretched his world-class athletics career so long, having won the junior global cross country title in 2001, shattering the world junior 3,000 metres title in August the same year (7:30.69), and most recently finishing third in the Great North Run just a week ago behind Ugandas Jacob Kiplimo and Selemon Barega of Ethiopia.

NN Running Club

Bekeles junior record was subsequently broken three-and-a-half years later by Kenyas Augustine Choge (7:28.78).

Interestingly, Choge, 37, is also still active and, like Kipchoge, Chepngetich and Bekele, also a member of the Jos Hermens-led, Nijmegen (Netherlands) based Global Sports Communication and NN Running Club.

Last year, Choge, who, like Kipchoge, started off as a track specialist, finished 17th overall in the New York City Marathon in a personal best 2:20:53.

Ethiopias Gebre-egziabher Gebremariam, Kenyas Abel Cheruiyot, Ugandas Boniface Kiprop and Kenyas Thomas Kiplitan, who finished ahead of Kipchoge in Dublin 2002, are now long retired from elite athletics.

And now with William Ruto as Kenyas fifth president, Kipchoge, 37, is still going strong and headed for another assault on the world marathon record when he lines up for Sundays Berlin Marathon, seeking to improve on the current record of two hours, one minute and 39 seconds which he set on the same, fast, pancake-flat Berlin course four years ago in 2018.

Sundays race will be a repeat of the rain-affected 2017 edition when Kipchoge (2:03:32), then targeting the world record, was pushed all the way by Ethiopian rookie Guye Adola who clocked the fastest ever time by a debutant (2:03:46).

Adola, winner last year in Berlin, will once again be Kipchoges main challenger in a race the Kenyan legend will be running in the improved version Nike Air Zoom Alphafly NEXT% 2.

These rocket ships are made to help shave precious time off your personal records without surrendering the foundation you need to go the full distance.

Enjoy the greatest energy return of all our racing shoes while you chase your personal bests, reads Nikes review of the latest shoe that retails at about $317 (approximately Sh38,000 in current exchange rates).

Indeed, as Kipchoges mantra goes, no human is limited. We hope he will slice some digits off the 2:01:39 on Sunday.

How I wish the increasing number of drug cheats in Kenyan athletics could follow the path The Boss Man Kipchoge has charted, and also train hard, win easy, rather than opt for performance-enhancing short-cuts.

As Kipchoge often says, Only the disciplined ones in life are free and anyone can do whatever they want. All they need is to believe!

All the best Eliud! We believe and well be rooting for you on Sunday!

Amwari banking on Mozzart Bet support to tackle Mombasa Rally

Abdul Sidi / Tuesday, September 20, 2022

With Mozzart Bet Kenya on board as his main sponsors, Issa Amwari is looking for a good result in next months Mombasa Rally.

Im encouraged with the support I am getting from Mozzart Bet Kenya to help me and my team compete in the KNRC events. Im thankful and looking forward to the Mombasa Rally, Amwari told Nation Sport.

The Mombasa Motor Club round of the 2022 Kenya Breweries Limited-sponsored Kenya National Rally Championship will take place on October 15 and 16.

Amwari, whose best result so far is fourth place in the Eldoret Rally, has a new navigator after Job Njiru retired from the competition recently.

The Mitsubishi Lancer Evo10 driver is now co-driven by Edward Njoroge. Amwari won the 2019 Division Two Championship title in one of his major recent achievements.

The remaining events of the 2022 Kenya National Rally Championship calendar are: Mombasa Motor Club (October 16-16), Rally Sports Club (November 5-6) and Sikh Union Club (November 26-27).

The remaining African Rally Championship rounds are: Rwanda Rally (September 24-25), Zambia Rally (October 22-23) and Rally of South Africa (November 19-20).

Other calendar events include the National Autocross Championship: Rallye Sports Club (November 5-6), Sikh Union Club (November 26-27), Mombasa Motor Club (October 15-16) and Nanyuki Rally Group (September 10-11).

The Kenya National Karting Championship rounds are: Rift Valley Motor Sports Club (October 1-2 and November 12-13) and Kenya Motor Sports Club (October 29-30).

The Kenya Rally Raid Championship events are: Vintage Classic Car of Kenya (September 10-11) and Rift Valley Motor Sports (October 29-30).

Safety is paramount in the sport of rallying. Mid-Point Monitors (MPMs) physically monitor the passage of cars at their allocated points and keep a record of each passing car.

In the event that the electronic tracking system goes on the blink the MPMs are the headquarters eyes and ears on the stage.

At rally speeds, a car will pass an MPM point every five to seven minutes, meaning the Clerk of Course and the Safety Officer can respond appropriately to a situation within minutes of a report of a missing competitor.

Getting all the correct resources in place means planning and the use of a competent Stage Commander.

New IFC podcast promotes women in Africa's renewable energy sector

Unknown Author / Unknown Date

With renewable energy forecast to play a growing role in Africa's energy future, IFC has launched a new podcast series to promote the role of women in the sector as senior executives, engineers and thought leaders.

In the She Powers Africa podcast, host Terryanne Chebet, an entrepreneur and media specialist, speaks with leading women in Africa's renewable energy space to light the path for the next generation of African women leaders into the dynamic sector.

The first three episodes feature Jennifer Boca, Head of Environmental, Social and Governance at Lekela Power; Olaedo Osoka, CEO of Daystar Power in West Africa; and Carol Koech, the Country President for Schneider East Africa.

This engaging podcast is ideal for women interested in working in the renewable energy sector and also for anyone concerned about climate change in Africa and curious about the practical solutions. Renewable energy is Africa's energy future and ensuring more women are part of that future will enhance the sector's success," said Anne Kabugi, IFC's Regional Gender Lead for Africa.

By 2040, renewable energy could account for more than 60 percent of new electricity generation in sub-Saharan Africa, excluding South Africa, according to the Africa Energy Outlook 2019 from the International Energy Agency.

But, despite the sector's importance, women lag behind men in leadership and technical jobs in the renewable energy sector and represent just one third of the renewable energy workforce in Africa, according to research conducted by IFC on women's participation in Africa's renewable energy sector.

The podcast is produced by IFC's Energy2Equal programme and its Women in Renewable Energy in Africa Network (W-REA), which both aim to enhance women's participation in the renewable energy sector.

Listen in.

EMTECH to pilot a US CBDC in The Digital Dollar Project Sandbox Programme

Unknown Author / UnKnown Date

EMTECH, a first-of-its-kind central banking infrastructure provider, has announced it will take part in the recently introduced Technical Sandbox Programme by The Digital Dollar Project to explore the new possibilities of a US Central Bank Digital Currency (CBDC) the digital dollar.

As one of the four announced technical vendors, EMTECH will bring its unique API-First and Energy Efficient CBDC Platform to test various use cases for cross-border payments.

The firm is joining a high-profile group of former US regulators and financial services experts. This initiative marks the next step in our effort to convene the private and public sector in a symbiotic exploration of a central bank digital currency in the US, said Jennifer Lassiter, executive director of The Digital Dollar Project.

EMTECH's Founder and CEO, Carmelle Cadet, is a former Global Business and Finance Leader at IBM. In 2021, she was invited by the US Congressional Financial Services Committee to testify on whether the US dollar should be digital. A market leader in central banking infrastructure, EMTECH's mission is to leverage technology to enable access to inclusive and resilient financial ecosystems. It's exciting to be part of the Digital Dollar Project Sandbox, and we are looking forward to collaborating with the federal government, policymakers, and private sector organisations to pilot CBDC options that encompass retail or wholesale models for cross-border payment use cases, said Mrs Cadet.

In her testimony, she highlighted the firm's vision and focus on helping central banks to build modern digital cash infrastructure using blockchain and distributed ledger technology (DLT). A consistent recommendation to the White House and the Congressional Committee is the use of a regulatory sandbox to enable faster and safer innovation from and with the private sector.

The current ecosystem for cross-border payments is a complex nightmare for financial service providers to navigate. EMTECH's CBDC Platform, with its API-First approach and high-performance DLT, is a more modern design that we're excited to bring to the Technical Sandbox Programme, said Tabor Wells, Chief Technology Officer at EMTECH.

Earlier this year, the firm announced its partnership with Hedera Hashgraph to build an energy-efficient CBDC to support its newly announced GREEN CBDC Framework, which is designed to help central banks unlock unprecedented value in deploying a CBDC. A key pillar of the framework is reducing the carbon footprint of financial services, while also limiting energy demand from fragile power structures. You can learn more about the GREEN CBDC Framework at greencbdc.com and emtech.com.

Kenya performed well in cushioning its citizens against Covid-19 economic shocks, but could have done better. This is the overall scorecard by UN Women, following a study. In particular, the report stresses the importance of ensuring that adopted economic stimulus and recovery packages are gender responsive and address the gender equity gaps.

Titled, Engendering Fiscal Stimulus Packages and Recovery Efforts Adopted in Response to the Covid-19 Health and Economic Crises, the report states: Compared to African countries, efforts by Kenya to cushion and promote recovery of citizens and businesses during Covid-19 through Economic Stimulus packages are commendable. However, UN Women points out that the country could have achieved more had it made those fiscal and monetary measures more gender-responsive.

The study is a gender-responsive assessment of the fiscal and economic stimulus package adopted in response to Covid-19 in Kenya. It provides vital recommendations for engendering government measures in response to crises as well as for economic recovery now and in the future. It pinpoints where the governments stimulus packages fell short, and offers suggestions on how to make economic stimulus packages more responsive to the needs of women, men, boys, and girls.

Engendering economic stimulus packages means taking into account the experiences and specific needs of women, men, girls, and boys, as well as the underlying causes of vulnerabilities, including gender gaps or inequalities, gender relationships, power structures, social norms, and leadership. These should count in both the design and implementation of the stimulus measures, the report states.

During the launch of the report last month jointly with Kenya's Cabinet Secretary for Public Service and Gender, Prof Margaret Kobia, the UN Women Kenya Representative Anna Mutavati, reiterated the importance of gender data in ensuring women and girls were not left behind in the development agenda.

We know that gender equality and womens empowerment are prerequisites for strong institutions, stable communities, and economies. Evidence from all around the world shows that investing in womens economic empowerment sets a direct path towards gender equality, inclusive economic growth, and wealth creation.

The UN Women study compared Kenyas response with what South Africa and Nigeria did. It recommends some lessons for Kenya to pick from the responses of the two Sub-Saharan African nations.

Consideration of the needs of women, men, boys, and girls in the design and implementation of the economic stimulus packages enhances economic and social inclusion and prospects of achievement of outcomes of cushioning against the shocks as well as recovery from the Covid-19 pandemics, the report offers.

The study is anchored on UN Womens commitment to supporting government efforts that contribute to womens livelihoods and their access to social protection, healthcare, infrastructure, food, and housing, among other sectors that the government has prioritised.

The analysis focused on economic stimulus packages implemented during the financial year 2020/2021. These include cash transfers to vulnerable families; National Hygiene Programme or the Youth Employment Programme; support to the educational sector; support to small and medium-sized enterprises liquidity; support to the construction sector; support to the health sector; support to the agricultural sector; support to the tourism sector; support to the environment; and support to the manufacturing sector.

An important underlying factor in response to and adaptability to changes in times of pandemics and crises is the feminisation of poverty, the UN Women analysis notes.

The study found that women, more than men, were deprived of social economic participation, information, and nutrition, and were generally multi-dimensionally poor. This is a key salient pathway in which gender contributes to disproportionately negative impacts of Covid-19. Women are also, more than men, involved with caregiving activities, including caring for the children, the sick, the elderly, and persons with severe disabilities.

Gender inequalities cause women and men to respond and adjust to pandemics and crises differently. Disasters and pandemics such as Covid-19 disproportionately and negatively affect women and girls when compared to men and boys, because of gender segregation in most economic activities, which is further reinforced by gender inequalities.

Unknown Author / UnKnown Date

Moreover, there has been an increase in gender-based violence, more specifically violence against women and girls.

Following the study, UN Women suggests that in times of crises, such as those comparable to the Covid-19 pandemic, Kenya could:

Consider expanding the sector coverage (of its stimulus package) for better economic recovery outcomes. This includes extending support to sectors such as housing, energy, and transport infrastructure. Temporarily expand social protection coverage during pandemics, through special programmes to reach previously uncovered beneficiaries. Consider extending social protection to practitioners in early childhood development, small-scale farmers and teachers, as well as those in creative, cultural, and sports sectors. Increase the amounts of cash transfers per recipient, for all the existing beneficiaries. Consider establishing a social relief from distress grant for caregivers, aimed at reducing increased unpaid care work during pandemics. Consider targeting micro, small, and medium enterprises (MSMEs) in all sectors of the economy, and not only in certain selected sectors. Consider implementing an unemployment insurance fund and compensation fund for health practitioners, and provide a temporary employee relief scheme for domestic workers. Consider enforcing the Access to Government Procurement Opportunities (AGPO) provisions, or even increasing the proportion reserved for women businesses. Implement special support to survivors of gender-based violence (GBV) and also, in partnership with civil society, establish a mechanism for linking them to shelter houses. This would address some of the challenges related to increased GBV during pandemics.

Overall, the analysis showed that the size of Kenyas provisions regarding various fiscal measures is small, measured by the size of the issues the specific measures target.

Digital payments ignite a new era of hope for SMEs in Kenya

Unknown Author / UnKnown Date

By Shehryar Ali, East Africa Country Manager, Mastercard

Its no secret that the pandemic was especially tough on small and medium enterprises (SMEs), particularly the many small cash-based businesses that operate in the informal sector. These businesses are the lifeblood of economies, and the fact that they couldnt generate incomes or apply for micro-loans to stay afloat, had a knock-on effect on everything, from employment to general community wellbeing.

In Kenya, SMEs account for 80 percent of jobs. In 2021 alone, an estimated 22 million jobs in Africa were lost, pushing more people into poverty. Its a devastating cycle that can only be broken with multiple actions technology and partnerships being chief among them as this challenge cannot be tackled through a single approach.

This challenging period did not have many silver linings, but one outcome that will have a positive impact on SMEs going forward is the increased rate of digitisation.

During times of limited mobility, more small businesses realised the necessity of selling online and getting paid digitally. This helped to boost cash flow without having to exclusively depend on the much harder and more arduous journey that cash entails to change hands.

The value of light

When I think about the economic strife experienced by so many cash-based SMEs during the pandemic, but also the fortunate acceleration of digitisation, I am reminded of the old Kanga saying: The value of light is noticed when night falls.

By now, the case for digital transformation is well established. Access to digital tools, associated training, credit, and resources, are key, not only to the growth of SMEs, but also integral to their survival. Ensuring that these smaller businesses have access to and benefit from the digital economy, is something that Mastercard is very passionate about.

SMEs are recognising the practical benefits of digitisation in day-to-day operations, as opposed to viewing it as a long-term project for the future. Data shows that 41 percent of SMEs that implemented digitalisation initiatives had stronger revenue growth in 2020 than non-adopters. Thats not the only benefit. Going digital better insulates SMEs against economic shocks, as they can tap into the global economy, reach a wider market, and accept cross-border payments.

Furthermore, as more consumers adopt and use a variety of electronic payments, this two-way digital adoption offers increased benefits for both the business and customers. People do not want to be stuck in a cash economy, which effectively leaves them locked out of many economic activities. They want access to a variety of financial services, and more retail choices.

A digital economy that continues to expand

With every passing day, the digital economy is increasingly becoming the economy. That is why digital inclusion is so critical. We all benefit when more people are connected to the digital economy.

At Mastercard, weve made it both our business strategy and our social responsibility to ensure that people and organisations have access to networks, tools and solutions that could help them reach their full potential and achieve financial security. We have pledged to bring one billion people and 50 million micro and small businesses into the digital economy by 2025, with a direct focus on providing 25 million women entrepreneurs with the solutions they need to grow their business. So how do we do it?

Solutions that support small business resilience

Access to credit is one way, and its something we do with data. Digitalisation of SME operations brings the benefit of generating this helpful data. This same data enables financial institutions to make more informed decisions about extending credit one of the key challenges for small businesses. A digitised record of transactions enables more small businesses to be brought into the financial mainstream, with access to finance solutions that can support their growth.

A great example of Mastercards Track Micro Credit Programme, fuelled by digital transaction data from the beneficiaries themselves, can be seen in Kenyas Jaza Duka initiative. Designed for micro merchants, this inclusive credit ecosystem gives small shop owners short-term credit and digital payment capabilities to help them build their creditworthiness and stock their shelves without having to rely solely on cash. Digitisation is empowering these small businesses to reach their true potential.

Collaboration brings scale, and wider inclusion

Partnerships are also crucial to ensure scale and impact. Just like Jaza Duka was originally launched with the help of Unilever, KCB and Mastercard, it was further scaled in partnership with Kasha this year. Another 5,000 MSMEs now have access to Jaza Duka through Kasha, a purpose-driven digital retail and distribution platform focused on providing women with affordable health and wellbeing products.

In addition, many of these newly included small businesses are run by women entrepreneurs, who are among Africa's most formidable, but also most marginalised, business owners. So, this is truly inclusion in action, on two key fronts.

Kasha has a long legacy of collaboration with Mastercard, having joined our Start Path engagement programme for start-ups in 2019. We've also invested in the e-commerce platform, and it's great to see this new chapter making such a positive impact on even more businesses.

The journey continues. At Mastercard, we're leveraging our technology, innovation, and solutions beyond payments to help small and medium enterprises get paid, get capital and get digital safely and securely wherever they are. We are dedicated to enabling businesses to survive and thrive stronger than before. This is how we are Empowering Every Business. Everywhere.
